3 (At 10:01 a.m., proceedings commenced.)

4 THE COURT: Good morning.

5 MR. HICKS: Good morning, Your Honor.

6 THE COURT: I'll ask everybody to introduce 7 themselves for me and the other courtroom personnel; and 8 while you're doing that, if you would also let me know which 9 one of you will be speaking for your table. So we'll start 10 with the Plaintiff.

11 MS. PARKER: Good morning, Your Honor, Katie
12 Parker with the ACLU of North Carolina for Plaintiffs. I'm 13 here at cocounsel with Helene Kraznoff from Planned 14 Parenthood Federation of America and Bebe Anderson with the 15 Center for Reproductive Rights, and Ms. Anderson will be 16 arguing for the Plaintiffs.

17 THE COURT: All right.

18 MR. HICKS: Good morning, Your Honor. May it
19 please the Court, my name is Faison Hicks. I'm a special 20 Deputy Attorney General with the North Carolina Department 21 of Justice. I represent all the defendants here today. And 22 with me is Stephanie Brennan, an Assistant Attorney General 23 with the DOJ. She's my colleague, and I'll be making the 24 argument this morning.

25 THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

1           All right. And before we start on the motions
2 themselves, I just wanted to discuss the logistics of it 3 with you. It's not strictly a TRO since the defendant is 4 here and has had an opportunity to be heard. On the other 5 hand, it's all been very fast as well. So I'm open to 6 letting this be -- we can talk about this. You know, we can 7 have the hearing today, just the argument; I can do whatever 8 I do. We can have a couple of days -- I have a few days in 9 December when you could have an evidentiary hearing if 10 that's needed. Or if you think there might be a good bit of 11 discovery or whatever that needs to be done, we could put 12 that off until March or May. Just logistically, what do you 13 all think is going to be needed?

14           MS. ANDERSON: Your Honor, Bebe Anderson for the 15 Plaintiffs. We don't think this is probably a case that 16 would require a lot of discovery, but obviously Defendants 17 might feel differently, and I do understand they haven't had 18 the case for long. So we're sort of open to hear what they 19 feel their needs are. Certainly, we can put on an 20 evidentiary hearing if that's needed and conduct whatever 21 discovery is needed.

22           THE COURT: All right.

23           MR. HICKS: Your Honor, two answers to your 24 question. In terms of this morning, what we would like to 25 do this morning, if the Court has substantial questions

1 about the claims of vagueness of the statute, I'm certainly 2 prepared to discuss the specific claims of vagueness that I
3 have seen the Plaintiffs identify. If there are more claims
4 of vagueness, I would note that the Texas court actually 5 gave the parties, I think maybe under oral argument, the 6 opportunity -- I think the Plaintiffs had a brief 7 opportunity to submit a supplemental brief very quickly to 8 the Court, I presume within a day or two, identifying all of 9 their vagueness claims, and the Defendants then had a day or 10 two to submit a down and dirty, very quick supplemental 11 brief responding to each of those specific claims. The 12 speed with which this has come on causes me a little bit of 13 pause, frankly, about the vagueness claims. I'm not sure I 14 fully comprehend all of them.

15           So I would simply note that for the Court and 16 suggest that at least in the State's view that might not be 17 a bad procedure here. Now, in the more long-term view of 18 things, I think the State will probably want to take some 19 discovery prior to an evidentiary hearing, but I don't see 20 why that couldn't be done before December so that we could 21 have the evidentiary hearing in December.

22           THE COURT: Okay. Anything else --

23           MR. HICKS: I'll certainly work with Bebe on that.

24           THE COURT: -- to add for the plaintiff on that?

25           MS. ANDERSON: Your Honor, certainly we are happy

1 to flesh out with the Defendants all the vagueness in the 2 statute and see if they have explanations that could be then 3 binding in some way and take care of any other vagueness in 4 the statute.

5           However, I would also note that in terms of 6 discovery, whether -- it depends on how much discovery the 7 Defendants need whether we could do it in time to have an 8 evidentiary hearing in December. I think the concerns about 9 the statute should not require a lot of discovery, so that 10 may indeed be feasible. On the other hand, it's just too 11 early for the Plaintiffs to know whether that would be -- 12 understandably, you know, Defendants don't yet know what 13 evidence they may feel they need put on or what discovery 14 they may need, and so it's hard to respond to that at this 15 time.

16           THE COURT: Well, if we did do something in 17 December, I was really thinking that it might just be still 18 a preliminary injunction since that's still not very much 19 time; and then if we needed to do something else down the 20 road, we could. But -- so why don't we plan on being here a 21 couple of days in December. The time that I have available
22 is the week of the 5th, so I would suggest -- that's a 23 Monday. I still think in terms of Mondays from my state 24 court days. So I would suggest maybe the 6th and the 25 7th that we set those aside. Is that agreeable?

1 MS. ANDERSON: Yes, Your Honor. Thank you.

2 MR. HICKS: Did you say the 6th and the 7th?

3 THE COURT: Yes, sir.

4 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor. That's fine.

5 THE COURT: All right. We'll set those aside for 6 an evidentiary hearing if anybody ends up having any 7 additional evidence they want to offer; and if not, we'll 8 check in and see what needs to be done at that time, okay?

9 All right. I've read everything, so I think I'm 10 ready to hear your legal arguments, and I'll hear from the 11 plaintiff first. Ms. Anderson?

12 MS. ANDERSON: Thank you, Your Honor. Does my 13 voice carry if I'm here without the microphone?

14 THE COURT: I can hear you.

15 MS. ANDERSON: Okay. Thank you. And also just to 16 clarify, Your Honor, if I could before I get started, in 17 terms of a potential evidentiary hearing in December, I'm 18 assuming that would be if -- you know, obviously if the 19 Court enjoins the statute, it would be an injunction that 20 could carry through to that later date.

21 THE COURT: Well, since I don't know what I'm 22 going to do, it would be -- if I grant you an injunction 23 today, it would be an opportunity to see whether that 24 extends. If I don't, it would be your chance to ask me 25 again after putting on some evidence. So -- and kind of the 1 opposite for the Defendants. Go ahead.

2 MS. ANDERSON: Thank you, Your Honor. And I also 3 wanted to thank Your Honor for scheduling this promptly, 4 because, as you're aware, this act is scheduled to go into 5 effect on October 26. And even though currently North 6 Carolina, of course, requires that informed consent be 7 obtained before any abortion, just as it's required for any 8 medical procedure --

9 THE COURT: Actually, you know, I think you may 10 have to use the microphone. I'm having just a little 11 trouble hearing you. I don't know if it will pull over 12 there to the lectern or not; and if it won't, I guess you'll 13 have to do it from the table.

14 MS. ANDERSON: That's fine, Your Honor. And as I 15 was stating that North Carolina currently requires that 16 there be informed consent before any abortion is performed, 17 just as is true for any medical procedure, and also 18 currently requires that an ultrasound be performed before an 19 abortion for medical purposes of dating. But the act 20 imposes significant changes --

21 THE COURT: Was that -- can I ask you about that?
22 Was that in the statute, or was that in just some 23 regulations?

24 MS. ANDERSON: It's in the administrative 25 regulations that govern facilities licensed as abortion

1 clinics, and it simply requires that it be documented that 2 an ultrasound was performed. It does not have any of the 3 sorts of requirements, of course, that are present in the 4 act and that are caught -- you know, that are so problematic 5 and constitutionally problematic.

6 THE COURT: All right.

7 MS. ANDERSON: So but clearly the act changes 8 things tremendously for abortion providers, and it's also 9 very confusing in parts, and it puts the abortion providers 10 at risk of significant penalties without knowing exactly 11 what they have to do. So we seek a preliminary injunction 12 and a TRO to maintain the status quo here until there is a 13 final judgment and a final determination of the 14 constitutionality of the act.

15 And we've moved on several of our claims, though 16 not all of them, but we've moved specifically to enjoin 17 Section 90-2182 and the two other sections that are 18 dependent upon it, which are 90-21.87 and 90-21.90, which 19 relate to informed consent on vagueness grounds and then 20 also Section 90-21.85 which sets forth the display and 21 speech requirements in the act which we are seeking to 22 enjoin both not only on vagueness grounds but also as a 23 violation of free speech rights of physicians and also a 24 violation of substantive due process.

25 So Plaintiffs feel they've adequately shown with

1 their arguments and their evidentiary submissions that they 2 meet the requirements for issuance of preliminary injunctive
3 relief; we're likely to succeed on the merits of the claims 4 that we have briefed; and Plaintiffs and their patients are 5 likely to suffer irreparable injury if injunctive relief is 6 not granted; and the balance of equities tips in Plaintiffs'
7 favor; and indeed an injunction to prevent unconstitutional 8 provisions from going into effect will certainly be in the 9 public interest.

10           Here, in terms of the types of irreparable injury 11 and harm that will occur if there is no injunctive relief, 12 those include that it violates the constitutional rights of 13 both patients and abortion providers. It also puts 14 providers in the untenable situation of having to comply 15 with unclear requirements. It appears to put them at risk 16 of criminal penalties, and it certainly puts them at risk of 17 quasi-criminal penalties in form of licensure penalties as 18 well as civil suits if they fail to comply with the act's 19 requirements.

20           In addition, physicians, if this law goes into 21 effect, would have to violate their ethical duties, which 22 would harm them, their patients, and the practice of 23 medicine generally, and then there'll be chilling in -- also 24 of the precision of the constitutionally right of 25 reproductive choice if this law is not enjoined.

1           So I'd like to turn first to the free speech claim
2 that Plaintiffs have presented which relates to Section 3 90-21.85. This display and speech requirement in the act is 4 unlike any requirement in force anywhere in the United 5 States. There are two other states that have enacted 6 similar laws, and in both of those states those laws have 7 been enjoined. Most recently, the Texas law was enjoined by 8 a Federal District Court, and a year ago the Oklahoma -- an 9 Oklahoma state court enjoined Oklahoma's similar ultrasound 10 requirements.

11           And the reasons that these requirements have not 12 been upheld and have not been allowed to go into effect 13 anywhere in the United States really goes to the heart of 14 the issue that Defendants rely upon, their argument that 15 this really is all just like what was allowed by the Supreme 16 Court in Casey. Clearly, this is not at all like what was 17 allowed by the Supreme Court in Casey. This is 18 qualitatively unlike the provisions that were upheld by the 19 Court, the provisions that were in that Pennsylvania statute 20 that the Casey Court evaluated.

21           The statute -- the informed consent provision of 22 the Pennsylvania statute that was considered by the Supreme 23 Court went to a requirement that all patients receiving 24 abortions be informed of risks and alternatives to the 25 abortion procedure, which is standard informed consent

1 requirements.

2           In addition, the State decided that it had -- 3 sorry -- the Supreme Court decided that its earlier 4 decisions that precluded any information that related to the 5 State's interest in potential life from being required to be 6 presented to the woman had gone to far, and they said it was 7 allowable -- the Supreme Court said it's allowable -- or may 8 be allowable for the State to make available to women or to 9 require that physicians make available to women 10 State-prepared materials that present information such as 11 fetal development information and also information about 12 benefits and services that may be available to women if they 13 choose to continue their pregnancy. And that's really what 14 the Supreme Court allowed in the Casey decision, and that is 15 totally unlike what is in Section .85. It's very similar to 16 what is in .82, though there are other problems with how 17 North Carolina tried to put those requirements into place, 18 which I'll get to in a moment.

19           But here, unlike the statute in Pennsylvania that 20 the Supreme Court considered, this statute in North Carolina 21 requires that every woman seeking an abortion come in four 22 hours before her procedure for the specific purpose of 23 having an ultrasound performed by the physician for the 24 purpose of generating images from her body, which then the 25 physician must describe and explain in particular ways

1 mandated by the State, and she has to do that before she can 2 have an abortion. And those requirements go far beyond 3 simply requiring that a woman know that the State wants to 4 encourage her to continue her pregnancy to term.

5           Rather, as is evident from the defendant's own 6 explanations of these requirements, the requirements are 7 meant to convey the State's opinion on the woman's 8 decision-making and on the woman's relationship with her own 9 particular specific pregnancy. And irrespective of the 10 woman's circumstances, for every woman, she's -- and 11 irrespective of her decision-making priorities and of her 12 desires as to what information or experiences she wants for 13 her decision-making, the State is requiring that all women 14 seeking an abortion be subjected to this experience of 15 having to come in, have this ultrasound performed for this 16 purpose of generating images from her body and having that 17 speech that the State mandates be provided by the physician;
18 otherwise, the woman cannot obtain a legal abortion in North 19 Carolina if that requirement goes into effect.

20           So there's nothing at all comparable in the 21 Pennsylvania statute. There's nothing in the Pennsylvania
22 statute that the Casey Court considered that required that a 23 medical procedure be performed on a women before she could 24 give informed consent for the abortion. There's nothing 25 that requires her body be used to generate information that

1 the State wants her to have. There's nothing requiring a 2 physician to subject the woman to unwanted images and 3 unwanted speech and nothing requiring a woman who doesn't 4 want those images and/or that -- to hear that speech to 5 contort herself while she's there in the physician's office, 6 in the clinic, having an ultrasound performed to contort 7 herself to avert her eyes and to somehow refuse to hear what 8 the physician is required to utter as the mouthpiece for the 9 State.

10           So the Court in Casey did not -- the decision 11 there cannot be -- possibly be read as allowing this 12 requirement to go into effect. The Court did not address
13 anything like it. Moreover, the Casey Court cannot be read 14 as providing carte blanche to the State to do anything they 15 want in order to support their interest in potential life.

16           Again, in upholding the Pennsylvania statute, the 17 Court was really reacting to its view that it had gone too
18 far before and had limited too much what the State could do, 19 but it did not say the State may do anything. Instead, it 20 may be permissible for the State to make some -- to require 21 that some information be available, and it certainly did not 22 rule that the State can go to absolutely any lengths to 23 force upon a woman information about her embryo or her 24 fetus.

25           So here the court has gone -- the State has

1 certainly gone too far, and that's where we get into the 2 First Amendment claim here that is so different from the 3 First Amendment compelled speech claim at issue in Casey.

4           As the federal court in Texas decided in 5 construing a very similar set of requirements there, the 6 strict scrutiny should be applied here, and it should be 7 applied here for either of two reasons: Either because it 8 is ideological speech or because it is -- has to be viewed 9 as intertwining both elements of commercial and 10 noncommercial speech when you're talking about the 11 conversation -- excuse me -- the conversation between a 12 woman and a physician prior to obtaining the medical 13 procedure.

14           But I think here it is very clear, and it's even 15 clearer now after the defendant's opposition brief was 16 filed, that what we're really talking about here is 17 ideological speech. Here, the Court -- here, the State is 18 requiring this entire package of experience that must be 19 imposed upon any woman before she can get a lawful abortion, 20 and this -- these requirements and this package of coming in 21 early, getting the ultrasound, limiting who can perform it, 22 requiring the speech, inflicting this experience on the 23 woman, the State has explained it is done for -- to give 24 her, quote, an opportunity to educate herself about her 25 unborn child before electing an abortion, end quote. It's

1 designed to, quote, arm the woman with realtime visual and 2 auditory information about her pregnancy and the particular 3 fetus living within her. It's supposed to provide the 4 pregnant woman with new and important information via, 5 quote, looking and listening to this information prior to 6 what they call the 4-hour cooling-off period which will 7 influence her understanding of her condition, her options, 8 and the best interest of herself and her unborn child, end 9 quote.

10           And then the State goes on to explain that these 11 requirements are going to make the woman who, quote, resists
12 the powerful urge to see her unborn child in a realtime 13 display, end quote, quote, contemplate the loss of the 14 unique opportunity for at least four hours and then puts the 15 woman in the position of having to, quote, resist the 16 State's efforts to get her to change her mind before -- end
17 quote, before she can obtain an abortion. Those statements 18 by the State show this is far beyond trying to inform the 19 woman's decision in trying to make sure that information is 20 provided to her. It inflicts this experience on her for the 21 particular purpose of causing her to view this decision the 22 way the State views the decision, and it's clearly the 23 ideological view of the State in terms of what should be 24 informing the woman's decision-making and in terms of how 25 the woman should prioritize and also what the woman must --

1 how the woman must react to these experiences, how a woman
2 is expected to react to these experiences.

3           So it's clear that the State is insisting that 4 each woman be provided -- be mandated to be provided with an 5 experience that will, quote, cause her to understand her 6 unborn child in a new light and make her see her abortion
7 decision through the State's lens, the State's ideological 8 view of abortion, not her own decision-making process that 9 has led her to seek an abortion, which is why she's there.

10           So Defendants have not met their burden of showing 11 the requirements of 90-21.85 are narrowly tailored to compel 12 any State interest which is the burden they then have.
13 They've asserted two interests to try to support the display 14 and speech requirements. The first interest they assert is 15 to protect women from psychological harm. The State claims 16 that its requirement that physicians put the ultrasound 17 screen in the woman's view and provide them mandated 18 description and explanation to every woman is needed to 19 protect every woman seeking an abortion against, quote, the 20 risk that she will subsequently suffer psychological and 21 emotional injury, potentially permanent, from seeing a 22 sonogram or hearing the heartbeat of a human fetus, end 23 quote.

24           For starters, the State presents absolutely no 25 evidence at all to support that there is a risk of such

1 psychological harm that any -- that women are harmed if they 2 have an abortion without having been forced to have this 3 image put in their view and hear this explanation and then 4 later seeing an image of a fetus or hearing a fetal
5 heartbeat. And it seems their argument seems to be premised
6 on a faulty assumption also that women who have abortions
7 have never seen an image of a fetus or never heard a fetal 8 heartbeat, which is, of course, belied, in part, by the fact 9 that the majority of women in the United States who seek 10 abortions have had at least one child by the time they -- 11 when they seek an abortion.

12           And, moreover, Plaintiffs have put evidence in the 13 record that show -- that contradicts the State's claim that 14 actually women's psychological health will be protected by 15 these requirements. We have evidence from Dr. Stotland who 16 is a well-credentialed mental health professional, and her 17 evidence shows the lack of support between the link for 18 abortion with psychological harm and also the potential for 19 harming women by forcing these experiences on them as the 20 State would do. Dr. Lyerly, an expert in medical ethics, 21 also provides evidence about the harms that come from 22 inflicting unwanted experiences on a patient when she's 23 seeking medical care, which is one of the reasons why these 24 requirements put physicians in this dilemma of having to 25 violate medical ethics if they comply with the law's

1 requirements. And then both Dr. Stuart's and -- Dr. Stuart
2 and Dr. Dingfelder relate circumstances from women's actual 3 experiences that show the type of harm that would come from 4 imposing these requirements on women based on actual 5 circumstances of women's lives.

6           Even if the State had met its burden, which it 7 hasn't, of showing that this interest in psychological -- 8 avoiding psychological harm and protecting women's 9 psychological health was furthered by the statute, they 10 would fail because they've failed to show that this is 11 narrowly tailored. Clearly, it would be much much less 12 restrictive if the State had required, as many states do 13 now, that the woman be offered the opportunity to view the 14 image and have, you know, any questions she has answered by 15 the physician. In fact, there's evidence in the record to 16 show that is indeed what happens now in North Carolina, that 17 women are provided the opportunity to see the ultrasound 18 image, and, of course, allowed as part of the dialogue with 19 the physician to ask questions. And such a narrow tailoring
20 would be more in conformity with medical ethics and respect 21 for the patient's decision-making and the patient's 22 autonomy.

23           And so, for example, if that were the requirement, 24 that would mean that the woman who was seeking an abortion, 25 for example, because she has a very serious or even fatal

1 fetal anomaly has been diagnosed, or say she's a victim of a 2 rape, she would not have to have the image put in her view 3 and the image described to her. She would be able to 4 decline that offer and not have to contort herself to avert 5 her eyes or somehow refuse to hear.

6           The second interest that Defendants assert is 7 somehow served by the requirements of the display and speech 8 requirement is, quite frankly, a little baffling to 9 Plaintiffs which is this interest in preventing coercion of 10 women, and they have presented no evidence, for starters, to 11 indicate that women in North Carolina are being coerced and 12 they're having abortions. But even more importantly, they 13 don't even present a remotely plausible explanation for how 14 forcing these experiences on a woman seeking an abortion 15 could prevent women from being coerced into having an 16 abortion.

17           So as to that interest, not only is it clearly -- 18 the statute's clearly not narrowly tailored to further it, 19 it doesn't further it in any way. So for all of those 20 reasons, Section 90-21.85 should be enjoined in its 21 entirety, Your Honor.

22           Now, there are also vagueness problems with the 23 act --

24           THE COURT: Well, let me ask you before you move 25 on to that. So do you see any distinction at all between

1 for purposes of your First Amendment argument for the actual 2 speech that's required describing what's seen on the 3 ultrasound screen and offering the patient the opportunity 4 to listen to the fetal heartbeat and placing the screen so 5 that the patient can see it? You know, those are three 6 discrete acts. Are they all the same for purposes of your 7 argument? How is placing the screen speech?

8 MS. ANDERSON: That's symbolic speech, Your Honor, 9 and the Supreme Court has certainly recognized that speech 10 includes symbolic speech -- wearing arm bands, for example, 11 is the classic example, and that it's certainly -- speech is 12 not limited to articulated words, much less words. So, for 13 example, a billboard would be speech even if it only has 14 images on it, it doesn't have any words on it. So both the 15 putting -- forcing the physician to put that image in the 16 woman's view and forcing the physician to speak and provide 17 the selected description that the State requires of the 18 image, those are both compelled speech and have the problems 19 I just mentioned.

20 Requiring an offer, on the other hand, would be 21 simply -- it would be more in line with providing 22 information to the woman. It would not be compelling the 23 content of the description. It would not be compelling the 24 physician to -- again, do the symbolic speech of putting 25 that in her view.

1           For example, the statute itself does have one 2 offer in there. It has the offer of trying to make the 3 heart tone audible if it's present, and we are not 4 contesting that that -- if that were all that was in there, 5 if that were the statute, if the statute were simply 6 requiring that the physician tell the woman that if you want 7 me to, I can try to see if the heartbeat is audible, do you 8 want me to? We would not be challenging that. It's in 9 there as part of the entirety, though, which again it's this 10 package, Your Honor, which shows so clearly the ideological 11 nature of what the State is requiring because it's requiring 12 all of this without any regard again to the individual 13 patient, to her circumstances, to her desires. It forces 14 the physician to say particular things and to take 15 particular symbolic steps that amount to symbolic speech and 16 goes, again, far beyond anything that's been upheld by any 17 court in this country.

18           THE COURT: Okay. Thank you.

19           MS. ANDERSON: Certainly, Your Honor.

20           As to vagueness, I want to turn first to Section 21 8290-20.82. As I mentioned, that is the section of the act 22 that has some relationship to what was looked at by the 23 Supreme Court in the Casey case. But what they managed to 24 do is they've managed to confuse the requirements in a way 25 that leaves the providers unsure of exactly how they can

1 meet those requirements.

2           The Defendants themselves acknowledge in their 3 opposition brief that the act contains what they refer to 4 as, quote, imperfections, imprecisions, and inconsistencies.
5 It certainly does, and those put the abortion providers in 6 the dilemma of needing to comply with the act to avoid 7 licensure penalties, civil remedies, potential criminal 8 penalties, and knowing how to set up their practice to be 9 performing lawful abortions, but not being sure of exactly 10 how they can do that.

11           And the Plaintiffs have put in evidence to the 12 Court explaining why the meanings of the provisions are 13 unclear, and Defendants have put in no contradictory 14 affidavits or explained how one can possibly understand what 15 these portions mean; and even if they did, of course, we 16 would need a binding court order for the physicians and 17 abortion providers to be protected because they're really in 18 this untenable position of being forced to comply and facing 19 these significant penalties.

20           With reference to to 90-21.82, the key issue is 21 really who can provide the information that is required 24 22 hours before and is required by .82(1) to be provided in 23 person by -- either in phone, over the phone, or in person, 24 but orally to the woman seeking an abortion. It starts out
25 very clearly. The beginning portion of that section states

1 that the required information must be provided by the 2 physician or a qualified professional, and then they define 3 the term "qualified professional."

4 But then when you look at the individual
5 components under that, that's where the lack of clarity 6 comes in. It seems that the State has clearly intended to 7 allow that information to be provided by a physician or 8 registered nurses, nurse practitioners, physician 9 assistants, or qualified technicians, but then they go and 10 say in several places that information is done in a 11 consultation with a physician, gestational age, probable 12 gestational age is determined by the physician, and at one 13 point they refer to the physician or -- a referring 14 physician or a qualified technician, totally -- again, 15 contradicting the opening piece which says that all of the 16 information can be provided either by a physician or by a 17 qualified professional.

18 So the most reasonable reading, Plaintiffs feel, 19 of 90-21.82(1) would be to accept the clear beginning 20 portion which lays out that any of this information can be 21 provided by either a physician or a qualified professional 22 as defined in the act. But given the internal 23 contradictions within that provision, abortion providers 24 cannot safely assume that's what the State meant, and, 25 therefore, they're left at this risk if they make that

1 assumption given the actual wording that the State used.

2 Also vague, and this relates to both .82 and 3 Section 90-21.90, is this issue about the State materials
4 and the reading of the State materials. Section 90-21.90, 5 which is termed "assurance of informed consent," it 6 amplifies the requirements of 90-21.82 related to the 7 State-prepared materials that the act mandates.

8 Again, .82 seems clear. It says that a woman has 9 the right to review those materials, and she's to sign a 10 form saying she had the opportunity to review the 11 State-prepared materials. Then when you get to .90, it 12 becomes unclear. And by the way, the part in .82 is 13 comparable to the Pennsylvania statute where -- and the 14 Court uphold the Pennsylvania statute in part because it
15 says the State can require that you make available 16 State-prepared materials about fetal development and that 17 women then have a choice whether to view them or not.
18 That's exactly what was in Pennsylvania, and the Court said 19 that was acceptable.

20 That's what seems to be in .82(2) until you look 21 at .90, which seems to require that if the woman is 22 illiterate, either because she's unable to read English or 23 Spanish, the two languages in which the State materials must 24 be prepared, or she can't read in any language, it appears 25 to require that the physician or qualified professional has

1 to read those materials her. So -- but it doesn't make 2 sense that a woman who can read either of those languages 3 does not have to read the State materials. She simply has 4 to know they're available and have the opportunity to review
5 them if she wants to; and, yet, these other women are going 6 to be forced to have to have these materials read to them, 7 and the physician will be forced to have to read them to 8 them.

9           So, again, there's contradictions within the 10 statute that leaves abortion providers unclear on how they 11 can safely comply with the act and protect themselves and 12 ensure that they're performing a lawful abortion. It seems 13 the most reasonable reading would be the reading that's in 14 .82, which is that all women have to have the -- be informed 15 of the availability of the State materials and be provided 16 the opportunity to review them.

17           So, for example, a woman who can't read in English 18 or Spanish can have her translator inform her what's in 19 those materials just as the statute allows her translator to 20 translate other information that the act mandates; and if 21 the woman is illiterate, perhaps there needs to be a 22 recording of what the materials say that she can listen to.
23 But that isn't how the law is written, so it's unclear how 24 providers can safely comply with this act and what their 25 obligations are if they have a woman who is not able to read

1 the State materials.

2           And then finally in terms of vagueness, in 3 addition to its other problems, which I've discussed, the 4 display and speech requirement has a lot of unclear
5 requirements within it. For starters, it uses -- it 6 restricts who can do an ultrasound to a physician -- the 7 particular type of ultrasound that the State's now requiring 8 in this act is very different from the current requirement.
9 It says that that can only be provided by limited categories 10 of qualified persons, not by all the people qualified to 11 perform an ultrasound as is currently allowed. It limits it 12 to the physician who is going to perform the abortion or a 13 qualified technician, as they define the term.

14           Then the State defines the term to include a term 15 that makes no sense in terms of actual medical practice in 16 North Carolina, because one of the categories of a person 17 who supposedly can be a qualified technician and meet the 18 requirements of .85 is an, quote, advanced practice nurse 19 practitioner in obstetrics, end quote. But that, as we've 20 put in evidence to show, is not a term that has meaning in 21 North Carolina medical practice.

22           One has to assume the Legislature did not intend 23 to put in a totally meaningless term, but then one is left 24 with the quandary of how does one interpret that 25 requirement? Perhaps it means that either an advanced

1 practice nurse, which is a term that's used, or a nurse 2 practitioner, another valid term, if either of those 3 categories of professionals has experience working with 4 pregnant women, thus, have experience in obstetrics, perhaps 5 those are what is meant by this term, and it just sort of 6 put -- it left out the "and" somewhere in the middle? But, 7 again, it's not safe for abortion providers to assume what 8 it means. So that requirement of actually who is allowed to 9 satisfy the requirements of the ultrasound law are not at 10 all clear.

11 Another lack of clarity in that Section .85 is the 12 requirement that the auscultation of the fetal heart tone be 13 done in a, quote, quality consistent with the standard 14 medical practice in the community. There is no such medical 15 practice in the community because there is no medical 16 practice to make heart tones audible for women seeking 17 abortions. That is something that's part of obstetrics
18 practice, it is not something that is part of abortion 19 practice. So, again, abortion providers do not know how 20 they are supposed to comply with that requirement.

21 And then finally, the most confusing part is this 22 72-hour provision which states that if the woman has had an 23 obstetric display of a realtime image of the unborn child 24 within 72 hours before the abortion is to be performed, the 25 certification of the physician or qualified technician who

1 performed the procedure in compliance with this subsection 2 shall be included in the patient records, and then the 3 requirements of this section shall deemed to have been met.

4           It's subject -- this requirement is subject to 5 many contradictory, inconsistent interpretations which we've 6 laid out in our brief, but it appears the Legislature is 7 basically either trying to provide some sort of a limitation 8 such that the ultrasound has to be performed not just at 9 least four hours before, but within a 4- to 72-hour window, 10 or that it's meant to be some sort of exception that perhaps 11 if the woman goes to a different facility and has an 12 ultrasound performed, and then the people at that facility 13 comply with the requirements of .85 and then document that 14 and send her -- and then she decides to have an abortion and 15 goes with that documentation, and it's within that limited 16 time window, maybe that's what it's meant to be. But it 17 really is impossible to know what it meant.

18           And I think that it's clear, though, that the 19 Legislature intended something by this and may indeed have 20 intended to, as I say, provide an exception and thus sort of 21 broaden the requirements of .85. So the vagueness of that 22 section can best be cured by actually enjoining the entire 23 Section 90-21.85.

24           Finally, just briefly to mention the substitute 25 due process claim that Plaintiffs have brought. If Your

1 Honor does not decide that Section 90-21.85, the display and 2 speech requirements, must be enjoined because it violates 3 the free rights of physicians or because of all the 4 vagueness problems I just mentioned, at a minimum it must be 5 enjoined as to those women who choose to avert their eyes 6 and/or refuse to hear the explanation because it is not even 7 rational to think that any State interest is served by 8 forcing those women to come in four hours before their 9 abortion and then waiting four hours to contemplate 10 information or images that they didn't see or hear.

11           And, of course, if that's the case and those women 12 are not subject to that, that would require that clearly 13 when people are scheduling their abortions, the abortion 14 facility would need to inform women, well, there's a 15 requirement right now under the State law -- the new State 16 law that you have to have an ultrasound in a particular 17 manner of a particular type for a particular purpose done 18 four hours ahead of time, and as part of that you'll be -- 19 we'll put the screen in your view, and we'll describe, in 20 the way the State's told us we have to, the image that's on 21 the screen. Now, if you don't want to have that, you don't 22 have to come in four hours ahead of time.

23           Well, obviously if that's done, that creates a 24 disincentive for any women to come in four hours ahead to 25 have that process which clearly the State did not intend to

1 create a disincentive for women to choose to view the screen
2 and hear the explanation. So that flaw means that really 3 this whole -- it really strikes the whole section because it
4 doesn't make sense to require it for those women, but it
5 doesn't make sense to accept those women in the logical way 6 that I just described.

7 THE COURT: So there you're not making an undue
8 burden argument, right? You're not making that undue burden 9 argument that appears in so many of these cases at this 10 time. I know you have it in your Complaint, but you're not 11 making it at this time, right?

12 MS. ANDERSON: At this time we are not making an 13 undue burden claim; that's right, Your Honor. We're saying 14 that this requirement doesn't even satisfy a rational basis.
15 It is just that bad.

16 And so it is simply -- you know, the State has 17 strained to come up with interests that are served by this 18 requirement that all of these women, you know, whether they 19 want -- the women that are going to avert their eyes and 20 refuse to hear it, it says that they have to come in, but it 21 doesn't make any sense to say that it advances any interest 22 in fetal life to do that, and there's certainly no support 23 in either evidence or logic to support the State's assertion 24 that there's some sort of psychological benefit to women to 25 be forced to undergo what they have termed this 4-hour

1 cooling-off period before they are able to obtain the 2 abortion that they've decided to have when they haven't even 3 looked at the image and heard the explanation.

4           And just finally, Your Honor, the balance of 5 equities really weighs in favor of Plaintiffs, and,
6 therefore, it justifies that an injunction be issued. The 7 Government won't be harmed by being prevented from enforcing
8 these unconstitutional requirements. There's no
9 administrative burden on the State that's going to be 10 present if this is enjoined. There's certainly no cost on 11 the State that's going to be present if this is enjoined.

12           And enjoining this would maintain the status quo.
13 Women will continue to have informed consent. Physicians 14 will continue to be required to obtain informed consent from 15 any women seeking abortion, just as is currently the law in 16 North Carolina, and they will continue to perform a 17 pre-abortion ultrasound, and women will, you know, be able, 18 if they want to, see the image or hear a description, but 19 there wouldn't be these unconstitutional requirements
20 imposed. And for that reason also, an injunction really 21 does serve the public interest.

22           And it's clear in the cases we've cited in our 23 papers that upholding constitutional rights is in the 24 public's interest and that there's a -- there's also a 25 strong public interest in maintaining the integrity of the 1 medical profession and the physician-patient relationship, 2 and, as the evidence we've put in shows, this act actually 3 undermines those.

4 THE COURT: So let me ask you one more question
5 about the First Amendment argument. So the Government can 6 compel physicians to tell patients -- to give patients
7 certain truthful and non-misleading information about 8 medical procedures. Do you agree with that generally?

9 MS. ANDERSON: As part of informed consent, one of 10 the categories that's allowed that's supposed to be covered 11 is indeed the medical procedure that the person is 12 contemplating having.

13 THE COURT: And so why doesn't this -- what's 14 required by this statute fall into that category?

15 MS. ANDERSON: This is entirely different from 16 that, Your Honor. This is requiring that an experience with 17 a particular purpose and designed to achieve that purpose -- 18 the State's purpose is imposed upon a person. This is not 19 requiring, as in Casey, that the woman have information 20 about her procedure, about her alternatives, about the risks
21 of her procedure and the alternatives. That's classic 22 informed consent information. And the State is clearly -- 23 as the court in Casey said, the State is clearly allowed to 24 regulate the profession of medicine in ways comparable to 25 other medical practice and that informed consent is

1 something that's required for all medical practice.

2           But you don't see another medical practice, and 3 it's not allowed here, and nothing in court decisions say it 4 can be, for the State to come in and say that you have to 5 have -- require women to undergo a particular experience to 6 extract information and images from their body and show
7 those to the women and describe those to the women in order 8 for them to have a medical procedure. That is totally 9 outside normal informed consent. And one of the things that 10 show that it's totally outside it is Dr. Lyerly's 11 declaration which explains the informed consent process and 12 the requirements that, as part of that, though there are 13 certainly categories of information that have to be provided 14 to a patient about a procedure, there's also a limit to how 15 much you tell the patient.

16           You don't tell -- you know, the patient has the 17 right of patient autonomy and decision-making as part of -- 18 that's what informed consent is supposed to do, allow the 19 patient -- information to allow the patient to make an 20 informed decision as to whether or not to get medical 21 treatment.

22           And so there are -- it's not unlimited what a 23 physician can say. The physician cannot go into any level 24 of detail simply as part of informed consent. It is 25 supposed to be guided in part by the level of detail that

1 the woman wants.

2 Here, this requirement makes -- it doesn't allow 3 for the woman to say, well, maybe I want some explanation, 4 no explanation. They basically have -- it's an all or 5 nothing situation or, you know, except to the extent she can 6 somehow refuse to hear. So that is totally contrary to the 7 normal informed consent process, which is, of course, part 8 of the regulation of medicine.

9 And also cases make clear that the State doesn't 10 have an unlimited right to regulate the practice of 11 medicine, and physicians do not lose all free speech rights.
12 Certainly, the court in Texas reviewing that statute
13 recognized that. The court in Florida in the Wolfanger case 14 recognized that. And the court in Casey also did not say 15 that all information is allowed to be required, that in 16 particular ideological speech cannot be required.

17 And as I've explained here, when you look at the 18 totality of this section, the display and speech 19 requirement, it is clear this really is ideological speech.
20 It is not simply information at all like what is required 21 under informed consent.

22 THE COURT: All right. Did I cut you off before 23 you finished?

24 MS. ANDERSON: No, Your Honor. Just again, we 25 would seek an injunction to protect abortion providers and

1 their patients from the harm that would otherwise come if 2 this act goes into effect on October 26 or thereafter.

3 THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

4 MS. ANDERSON: Thank you, Your Honor.

5 THE COURT: All right. For the defendant?

6 MR. HICKS: Your Honor, may it please the Court,
7 again, my name is Faison Hicks, and I represent the State.

8 Before I begin my prepared remarks, I would like 9 to address the point that Ms. Anderson made about how this 10 case is completely different from all the other abortion 11 informed consent statutes that have come before the Supreme 12 Court in other courts in that it involves a statute which 13 compels a physician or other health care provider providing 14 abortion services to -- it sounds to me like what they are 15 really saying is to not only make this information available 16 to the patient, to the woman, but to make it available to 17 the woman in a way that she can't avoid actually receiving 18 hearing the information, seeing the information, and 19 otherwise processing the information.

20 THE COURT: Well, isn't that what it does?

21 MR. HICKS: No, ma'am, it does not.

22 THE COURT: How do you refuse to hear?

23 MR. HICKS: You don't have to -- well, the answer 24 to that question is this. As I understand the statute, the 25 physician is required to perform an ultrasound, and he will

1 have a screen in front of him, I presume, a monitor in which 2 he'll be seeing the ultrasound image. The patient, I
3 presume, will be laying on a table or sitting on a chair.
4 The physician could easily position a monitor at a 90-degree 5 angle to the right or left of the patient's head with the 6 patient facing this way so that the patient would have to 7 turn 90 degrees this way or that in order to see the 8 monitor.

9           Furthermore, Your Honor, the arrangement, as I
10 understand it, could be done in such a way that -- I don't 11 know whether anybody else in this courtroom is old enough to 12 remember this, but I'm certainly old enough to remember 13 attending a lot of depositions and going to a lot of trials
14 where the court reporter wore a mask. It's a dictation 15 mask, and the court reporter speaks into the dictation mask 16 in a normal tone of voice, and yet no one in the courtroom 17 or the deposition can hear what he or she is saying. The 18 deposition mask is connected electronically to some 19 recording device.

20           I presume that what would happen here, or at least 21 one option that could happen here, is that the dictation 22 mask into which the physician speaks as he or she is looking 23 at the sonogram monitoring screen would be connected to 24 earphones that the woman would wear that would have an 25 on/off switch so that the woman would be in complete control

1 of whether the information came to her or not.

2           So the State rejects the Plaintiffs' underlying 3 argument that this is information that's irresistible, that 4 is going to bombard the woman in a way that she can't avoid 5 it, she can't avoid hearing it, she can't avoid seeing.
6 That's, in our view, simply not so. The woman does have 7 every opportunity to simply decide do I want to receive this 8 or do I not?

9           Have I answered the Court's question?

10           THE COURT: So you're saying to comply with this 11 statute, the health care provider would need to buy this 12 special equipment?

13           MR. HICKS: I'm saying that is one way that a 14 health care provider could clearly comply with this statute
15 by simply acquiring the equipment that court reporters I 16 know used to routinely use and probably still do so that --

17           THE COURT: Okay.

18           MR. HICKS: I didn't mean to cut you off.

19           THE COURT: No, no, I was saying okay, yeah.

20           MR. HICKS: Your Honor, I'd also like to hand up 21 for the Court a copy of 10A NCAC 14E.0305. I have 22 additional copies. I think Ms. Anderson is already aware of 23 it. But just for the record and as an ease -- to be easy on 24 the Court, this is a copy of the administrative regulation 25 that goes back to 1976, I believe.

1           THE COURT:   Nineteen, what did you say?

2           MR. HICKS:   Seventy-six, February 1, 1976, that 3 says, among other things, in subpart D, that an ultrasound 4 examination shall be performed and the results posted in the 5 patient's medical record for any patient who is scheduled 6 for an abortion procedure. There's nothing new about the 7 performance of an ultrasound procedure in connection with 8 abortions. It's routinely done.

9           The ultrasound in this case under the act could be 10 performed. It could be scheduled certainly within a 72-hour 11 time frame. It could be scheduled such that the patient 12 would come in and have it performed and have the information 13 made available to her if she chose to perceive it and then 14 have either a 72-hour period or 4-hour period within which 15 to consider the information as it informs her decision. So 16 I wanted to point those things out to the Court before I 17 began my argument in chief.

18           Your Honor, in the State's view, the key starting 19 point for determining whether the Plaintiffs' motion for a 20 preliminary injunction should be granted is the 21 determination of what is the proper legal standard by which 22 the act should be analyzed. The Plaintiffs claim that the 23 proper legal standard is strict scrutiny, by which they 24 really mean the act should be held to be unconstitutional on 25 its face without any analysis at all of the interest that

1 the act furthers, because that's what strict scrutiny really 2 means.

3 But the Supreme Court's decision in Casey
4 carefully identified the analytical framework that courts 5 should employ in evaluating the constitutionality of 6 statutes imposing informed consent requirements on health
7 care providers in the abortion context. The State believes,
8 Your Honor, that the Casey decision cannot be read 9 reasonably as being anything other than a directive by the 10 Supreme Court -- well, an analytical framework that is 11 mandated by the Supreme Court for a genre of controversies, 12 namely, abortion informed consent cases.

13 The Casey Court did not limit the applicability of 14 this holding, it merely took the unique requirements of the 15 informed consent statute at issue in that case. Rather, the 16 Court laid down generalized principles that the lower courts
17 are to apply in analyzing all informed consent to abortion 18 statutes which are challenged either as unconstitutional 19 because they allegedly force speech by physicians or which 20 are challenged as unconstitutionally inhibiting a woman's 21 right to obtain an abortion.

22 Just as in Casey, the Plaintiffs here challenge
23 the statute at issue facially as an unconstitutional 24 requirement that they --

25 THE COURT: If you can just slow down just a hair.

1 MR. HICKS: Oh, sure.

2 THE COURT: So I can --

3 MR. HICKS: I'm sorry, Your Honor.

4 THE COURT: That's okay. I hear, you know, 5 southern.

6 MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am.

7 Just as in Casey, I would merely point out that 8 the Plaintiffs' challenge here is a facial challenge to the 9 constitutionality of the North Carolina act on the ground
10 that it allegedly forces the physicians and other health 11 care providers to engage in speech with which they do not 12 agree. In that sense, it's right on point with Casey.

13 Just as in Casey, the Plaintiffs here challenge
14 the statute at issue, again on facial, constitutional 15 grounds, as a restriction on a woman's right to have an 16 abortion.

17 Also just as in Casey, the Plaintiffs here are 18 physicians and abortion health care providers.

19 And just as in Casey, the statute at issue here is 20 a statute which requires health care providers in the 21 abortion context to provide specifically identified 22 information to the woman seeking an abortion in order to 23 fulfill the health care provider's legal duty to obtain the 24 informed consent of the patient.

25 Now, the Court, if I recall correctly, in

1 Ms. Anderson's argument asked Ms. Anderson a question that I 2 took to mean what is the difference in principle between the 3 information that the court in Casey said was 4 constitutionally permissible and the information that's 5 required by the North Carolina act that Ms. Anderson and her 6 colleagues believed is not admissible? Your Honor, from my 7 perspective, from the State's perspective, although the 8 information is not the same, it's different information, it 9 is all the same in the sense that it is information that is 10 designed to inform a woman's decision about the question of 11 whether to have an abortion or whether to carry a child to 12 term.

13           These statutes are always going to be different.
14 Each one will have its own requirement -- unique 15 requirements as to what sort of information is conveyed, but 16 the key point in Casey was that so long as the information 17 conveyed is information that meets the requirements laid 18 down by the court there, including specifically that it 19 inform the woman's decision and not be designed to restrict, 20 that that sort of statute is constitutional.

21           Now, the legal standard that the Casey Court held 22 appropriate for challenges to the constitutionality to form 23 the consent to abortion statutes is what the Court referred 24 to as the undue burden statute. Under this legal standard, 25 the undue burden on a woman's right to obtain abortions

1 exists such that the statute is invalid if the statute's 2 purpose or effect is to place substantial obstacles in the 3 path of the woman seeking an abortion prior to the time that 4 the fetus becomes viable. Put another way, this standard
5 means that the statute at issue may not prohibit abortion
6 prior to fetal viability or impose a substantial obstacle 7 to, and I quote, the woman's effective right to elect the 8 procedure, closed quote.

9           The Court also held that an informed consent to 10 abortion statute imposes a substantial obstacle to a woman's 11 effective right to elect an abortion when the statute, and 12 again I quote, hinders the woman's free choice rather than 13 informing it, giving what I believe is a strong indication 14 of what the Court believes is appropriate in these acts; 15 that is, information, something that will inform the woman's 16 decision about whether to elect an abortion or not, 17 something in the nature of information that will provide the 18 woman with a mature and rational basis for deciding either 19 to carry the baby to term or to submit to an abortion.

20           And the Casey Court went on to say that what was 21 at issue in that case, and I believe in all of these consent 22 to obtain an abortion statutes, is the woman's right to make 23 the ultimate decision whether to have an abortion. What is 24 not at issue is a right to be insulated from all others in 25 doing so. Again, I think the Court is telling us something

1 about what the permissible purposes of these statutes are.
2 And one permissible purpose of a statute like the act that's 3 at issue today is for the State to inform the woman of a 4 number of things, the moral consequences of an abortion, the 5 consequences to the fetus, the potential consequences to her 6 future psychological and emotional health as the court 7 supposed them to be and determined as a matter of fact they 8 were.

9           The Casey Court went so far as to say that to 10 promote the State's profound interest in potential life 11 throughout pregnancy, the State may take measures to ensure 12 that the woman's choice is informed, and measures designed 13 to advance this interest will not be invalidated so long as 14 their purpose is to persuade the woman to choose childbirth
15 over abortion, so long as the information that the informed 16 consent statute requires the doctor to convey is truthful 17 and not misleading and so long as those measures do not 18 unduly burden the woman's right to choose.

19           Thus, the Casey Court held that an informed 20 consent to abortion statute will be upheld even if it is 21 designed to persuade the woman to choose childbirth over 22 abortion, so long as the statute does not unduly interfere 23 with a woman's right to make the ultimate decision and is 24 reasonably related to the goal of trying to persuade the 25 woman to choose childbirth over abortion and requires the

1 physician to impart only truthful and not misleading
2 information.

3           Here, the statute could not go any further in 4 requiring the transmission, the offering up, if you will, of 5 truthful and not misleading information because the statute 6 requires that at least in so far as the sonogram and the 7 fetal heartbeats sound are concerned exact information. I
8 mean, it's realtime -- a realtime view of the woman's unborn 9 child and of the sound of the unborn child's heartbeat if 10 that's audible. Nothing could be more true and accurate or 11 scientific than those facts. There's nothing misleading 12 about any of that.

13           THE COURT: Now, the State is not requiring the 14 doctor to make the heart tone available in all cases, right?
15 They only have to offer that --

16           MR. HICKS: That's correct.

17           THE COURT: -- if I understand correctly.

18           MR. HICKS: And indeed, Your Honor, the -- as I 19 understand the statute, the State does not require the 20 physician or other health care provider and to get through 21 to the patient even with the sonogram. The sonogram, as I 22 think the Court observed earlier, has to be displayed on a 23 monitor in the room. To me, it would -- I think it would be 24 more than sufficient if the monitor were at a 90-degree 25 angle to the woman's head so that she could make the

1 decision whether to avail herself of the opportunity, and 2 the statute clearly says the information is only to be 3 offered to her, not to be forced upon her.

4           In addition, the Casey Court stated that consent
5 to abortion statutes that are designed to foster the health 6 of a woman seeking an abortion are valid if they do not 7 constitute an undue burden on the woman's effective right to 8 choose, and the Court specifically concluded that the 9 psychological health of a woman seeking an abortion is a 10 matter in which the State has a substantial government 11 interest.

12           The Court then said something that to me is 13 compelling for the Plaintiffs' motion, and that is the Court 14 said -- and this was repeated by a different majority in the 15 Gonzales case. It said as fact that -- if I'm getting 16 this -- if I'm repeating it correctly -- that a woman who 17 goes to get an abortion who is not shown the fetal sonogram, 18 who is not shown an image of her unborn child, and who 19 elects to abort, and who then some time down the road sees 20 the image of an unborn child with its members, with its 21 eyes, with its head, and other human features, may suffer
22 what the Court termed "devastating psychological injury."
23 The court in Gonzales went much further in describing that 24 sort of psychological injury.

25           So, again, it seems to me that the State is

1 supported not just by Casey in requiring that a physician at 2 least offer this information to the patient if she is 3 willing to look at it --

4 THE COURT: Of course, this -- you know, this 5 statute goes further than offering, don't you think?

6 MR. HICKS: No, ma'am, I do not. I believe, as I
7 said earlier, that the statute simply requires the physician 8 to put out a monitor and to say to the woman, you're free to 9 look at this. This is what -- it's going to depict -- it's 10 going to be the sonogram of your unborn -- of your fetus or 11 embryo. You may look at this. You're free not to look at 12 this. I believe, as I've already said to the Court, that a 13 physician, particularly if the physician feels the way I 14 believe the Plaintiffs do in this case, can and probably 15 would adopt some technological method such as a dictation 16 mask that would make it feasible for the physician to 17 dictate the description that's required by the statute into 18 the mask so that it could only be heard by the woman on her 19 earphones if she elected to turn on the turn-on button and 20 not if she elected to turn the earphones off.

21 In short, I absolutely reject the argument that 22 this information is information that inevitably will get 23 through to the patient whether the patient wants to hear it 24 and see it or not. That's just not true. Existing 25 technology can prevent any such eventuality.

1           THE COURT: One way that this case is a little 2 different from Casey is it requires speech by the doctor.
3 As I understood Casey, it was materials to be made 4 available. Do you think that's a distinction that makes any 5 difference?

6           MR. HICKS: No, ma'am, particularly in light of 7 the Plaintiffs' attorney's responses to the Court when the 8 Court asked a similar question to them, and their response, 9 as I understood it, was this is symbolic speech; and surely 10 providing literature to a woman, written literature, or 11 pointing her to a website that contains that literature or 12 reading or speaking information through the telephone, 13 surely at a bare minimum those acts would constitute the 14 same sort of compelled symbolic speech, but I think it would 15 go farther than that.

16           So to me, the Casey statute, which dealt with 17 providing facts, documents, and that sort of thing, is 18 different from this statute only in a very ironic way, and 19 in a sense this is, I think, the nub of this case, Your 20 Honor. I believe the more I read and hear the Plaintiffs' 21 argument that their real grievance with the act is that the 22 General Assembly is requiring that they offer information to 23 a patient which is, just by its nature, so compelling, so 24 powerful, that they fear it will be persuasive.

25           It would be, to my way of thinking, a very strange

1 thing if courts said you can provide cold record documents 2 that are incredibly technical and boring and medical in 3 their nature and scientific in their nature, that's okay.
4 That's all to the good because it allegedly informs a woman 5 and gives her the information to make a mature judgment, as 6 the Casey Court said, about whether to have an abortion or 7 not. And yet when a State says, well, we would like you to 8 offer up information that really is interesting, compelling, 9 something that really has the power to possibly change a 10 mind or two, then precisely because it is powerful, there's 11 an objection that the information is somehow 12 unconstitutional.

13 Have I answered the Court's question?

14 THE COURT: Um-hum.

15 MR. HICKS: The Casey Court specifically held, 16 Your Honor, that an informed consent to abortion statute may 17 lawfully and constitutionally require physicians and other 18 health care providers to inform a woman seeking an abortion 19 of the availability of truthful and non-misleading materials 20 relating to the consequences to the fetus, even when those 21 consequences have no direct relation to her health.

22 Now, again, if Casey would allow a statute to 23 require health care providers to provide materials that are 24 relevant to those subjects, that is to say, the welfare of 25 the fetus itself, even if it's unrelated to the Plaintiffs'

1 own health, then surely that same rule would apply to a 2 different form of information that's offered optionally to 3 the woman. The sonogram, the image of her child, the sound
4 of the child's -- unborn child's heartbeat, the description 5 if she wishes to hear it of the members and features of the 6 child. There's no difference in principle. All of these 7 things go to inform the woman and to enable her to make a 8 decision on an informed basis about whether to abort the 9 pregnancy.

10           The Casey Court also specifically upheld the 11 validity of the 24-hour waiting period imposed by an 12 informed consent to abortion statute as a reasonable measure 13 to implement the State's interest in protecting the fetus.

14           Finally, the Casey Court dismissed out of hand the 15 Plaintiffs' argument that an otherwise valid informed 16 consent to abortion statute is unconstitutional simply 17 because it interferes with the doctor-patient relationship 18 and the argument that the abortion provider's First 19 Amendment speech rights are violated by such a statute.
20 Casey specifically dealt with those two issues. If Casey 21 applies here, and I believe it does -- I believe any 22 faithful, fair reading of Casey demonstrates that it does 23 apply here -- if it does, those two arguments are out the 24 window.

25           Thus, in the State's view, the issue presented by

1 the Plaintiffs' facial challenge to the statute is whether 2 the North Carolina informed consent to abortion statute
3 requires them to communicate information that is truthful, 4 not misleading, and that creates an obstacle, a meaningful, 5 significant obstacle to the woman's practical ability to 6 have an abortion.

7 THE COURT: You know, you said something a minute
8 ago about moral issues here. So is it your position that -- 9 this would go further than what the State actually did. But 10 under your argument, could the State require the doctor to 11 say to the patient that abortion -- you know, pick your 12 statement, but abortion is morally wrong, or abortion is 13 killing, or something like that. I mean, a lot of your 14 argument sounds like you think that the State could make the 15 doctor deliver that message to the patient so long as the 16 patient could put her iPhone, you know, turn her iPad on -- 17 her iPod, okay, her iThing, her iPad, her i -- you know, her 18 music thing on before the doctor delivered the message. And 19 I'm joking about it, but obviously it's very serious. Is 20 that something you think the State could do?

21 MR. HICKS: I don't know, Your Honor, and I'm not 22 saying that to dodge your question. I honestly don't know.
23 What I said was simply that comes right out of Casey. Casey 24 specifically says that a statute -- an informed consent to 25 abortion statute may discuss the moral consequences of

1 abortion, I think the moral and philosophical underpinnings
2 of abortion. And I would simply --

3 THE COURT: So direct me to exactly where it says 4 that part.

5 MR. HICKS: Will you give me a moment, Your Honor?

6 THE COURT: Uh-huh.

7 MR. HICKS: If you'll just bear with me, Your 8 Honor.

9 THE COURT: Yeah, take your time.

10 MR. HICKS: Thank you. Your Honor, I'm looking at 11 page 872.

12 THE COURT: 872?

13 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor.

14 THE COURT: Okay. I see it. Philosophic and 15 social arguments?

16 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor, and there's also 17 discussion -- at some point they use the word "moral 18 implications." But this is -- maybe I spotted this 19 immediately, but I'm confident that the word "moral" or 20 "morality" is contained in one of the Court's statements 21 about what the statutes can do, and I would be happy to 22 provide the Court with a supplemental letter brief or 23 something that will identify the exact quote.

24 THE COURT: All right. Well, I'll read it again.

25 MR. HICKS: May I answer your question, though,

1 because I don't think I really did.

2 THE COURT: Yes, go ahead.

3 MR. HICKS: If I recall correctly, the Court asked
4 me whether I would go so far as to say that an informed 5 consent to abortion statute may dictate that the physician
6 says something like an abortion would kill an unborn child
7 or it's immoral or something really strong like that, and I 8 think I said to the Court I really don't know the answer to 9 that.

10 That is not the case here, and it's important to 11 say that. That is not what the General Assembly did here.
12 It may be that if a physician's imposition of authority were 13 required to make judgment calls, value judgments like that, 14 that that would go too far. I mean, that may very well be, 15 and that is not our case, and that's not what the act 16 requires.

17 I would also --

18 THE COURT: So you'd basically disagree with the 19 Plaintiffs when they say this is ideological speech?

20 MR. HICKS: Yes, absolutely, Your Honor. If it's 21 ideological speech -- see, I'm not even sure I understand 22 what that term really means in the context of informed 23 consent to abortion statutes, because Casey says that 24 statutes that do almost everything -- in fact, I think 25 everything that this statute does are okay. It specifically

1 says they are okay. So if that's ideological speech for the 2 State to simply say we have a profound preference for 3 potential life, Casey says the State can say that. It can 4 require a physician to transmit the State's message if 5 that's the message.

6           What is perhaps being lost here, though, is this.
7 Note that the statute ultimately really requires a certain 8 minimum communication of information. It does not 9 require -- it doesn't say to the physician this is all you 10 shall say, and you're not entitled to say another word; and 11 it doesn't tell the physician, for the most part, how to say 12 these things. For example, there's nothing in the statute 13 after the physician has imparted the information that the 14 statute requires -- there's nothing in the statute that 15 would prevent the physician from saying, look, my own view, 16 as your physician, is that the information that I've just 17 given you or just offered to give you, which you have chosen 18 to ignore or not to ignore, is really not very relevant to 19 your decision in your circumstances to have an abortion. I 20 don't believe as your physician that there will be any 21 untoward psychological consequences to you in the future if 22 you have one. There are any other number of things a 23 physician could say if he or she were so inclined, and the 24 statute doesn't forbid that. It doesn't restrain any of 25 that.

1           Now, getting back to whether the information
2 required to be communicated but not received in this case
3 is -- would pass muster under the Supreme Court's decision, 4 the Supreme Court in Casey said all information required to 5 be communicated must be truthful and not misleading. Again, 6 the information here couldn't be more truthful. It couldn't 7 be less misleading. It's scientific and medical in nature.
8 It's not only absolutely factual, but it's information 9 that's specifically tailored to the woman who is 10 considered -- the individual woman who is considering having 11 an abortion.

12           In addition, all the information that's required 13 by the statute is designed to assist the woman in making an 14 informed and mature decision about whether to have an 15 abortion or deliver her child. That's specifically 16 permitted by Casey. It specifically says a state statute 17 that does that is okay.

18           Furthermore, the information required by the act 19 to be communicated is also designed to promote the State's 20 interest in protecting the woman from the future devastating 21 psychological health consequences, which at least the Casey
22 Court, the highest court in the country, and the Gonzales 23 Court found, would, in fact, ensue if the woman had the 24 abortion without knowing this information and then later for 25 the first time came upon this information.

1           The Gonzales Court went to much greater lengths 2 than the Casey Court in articulating what it, it appears to 3 me, concluded as a fact are the devastating future 4 psychological consequences and injuries to the woman if she 5 is not offered this information prior to having her 6 abortion. In terms of --

7           THE COURT: I mean, that's an interesting point.
8 If that's so, then why can't the State force her to look at 9 it and listen to it?

10          MR. HICKS: I don't know that the State can't.
11 The General Assembly decided, for reasons which I'm not 12 aware, not to go that far. I can surmise. I can conjecture 13 and guess that they thought it was prudential not to go that 14 far and that they thought perhaps that Plaintiffs would make 15 an argument in a court asking the Court to enjoin the 16 statute, an argument that the Court -- that might be more 17 moving and compelling to a Court if the Plaintiffs could say 18 this -- the plaintiff -- or the poor woman has to listen to 19 this, she has to be subjected to this, and it's enormously 20 upsetting. Perhaps that's why the General Assembly chose to 21 make this elective rather than not elective.

22          But the fact is the statute does not require the 23 woman to look, to listen, or to receive this information.
24 She is indeed free to elect -- just as she's free to elect 25 to have her abortion or not, she's free to elect to receive

1 this information or not. And in that sense, I believe, the 2 statute, just at a common sense level, is reasonable. It's 3 not oppressive. It does not punish her. It does not force 4 her into an emotionally difficult situation.

5 Have I answered the Court's question?

6 THE COURT: Um-hum.

7 MR. HICKS: I was going to go on, Your Honor, to 8 address the question of whether the act's informed consent
9 provisions are rationally related to protecting any interest 10 that the State has a legitimate interest in.

11 And, again, under the specific language in Casey, 12 as reinforced by Gonzales, the act's informed consent 13 provisions are rationally related to protecting the woman's 14 future psychological health, something that's specifically 15 recognized by Casey, to the State's interest in promoting 16 the potential life of the unborn child; again, something 17 that's specifically recognized by Casey and Gonzales as 18 legitimate governmental interest and the State's interest in 19 ensuring that the woman not undergo an abortion without at 20 least having an opportunity to fully appreciate the 21 consequences to herself and to her unborn child.

22 In terms of the void for vagueness argument, I 23 will direct the Court's attention to Gonzales. The Court in 24 that case specifically held that the act at issue there, 25 like the act -- the act at issue there was a criminal

1 statute. The act at issue here is not. The Court found 2 that significant.

3 THE COURT: So what does it mean -- why is it in 4 the statute there at the beginning of 90-21.85(a), the 5 statute we're mostly talking about, it says, 6 "Notwithstanding GS14-451." Well, I believe the 14s, that's 7 criminal law.

8 MR. HICKS: It is.

9 THE COURT: Yeah, so why is that there? What is 10 the purpose of that phrase?

11 MR. HICKS: My understanding of that -- my reading 12 of it is simply this, that the General Assembly was saying 13 there are criminal statutes that regulate in a criminal way 14 the performance of abortion. Despite those, putting those 15 aside as not being applicable here, the civil liabilities
16 for violating this statute are X.

17 Now, it may be that that was not the most artful
18 way to state this, but I think the Court would have to twist 19 itself into the shape of a pretzel to come to the 20 affirmative conclusion that there is criminal liability in 21 the statute, and I would just ask the Court to consider 22 this: If I were representing a criminal defendant charged 23 with a crime under this particular statute, a physician, for 24 not complying with this statute, I'd ask the Court to 25 consider whether the Court would look favorably upon my

1 argument that, oh, Your Honor, you have to be kidding.
2 Criminal statutes have to be clear. There can't be any 3 doubt about whether they impose a sanction. This statute 4 doesn't meet that standard by a long shot. At most, at 5 most, in the context of a case where Plaintiffs want the 6 statute to be held unconstitutional, they point to that 7 screwy choice of phrase and say the statute is criminal, and 8 it's not.

9 THE COURT: So you're saying that basically that's 10 in there to make it clear it's not --

11 MR. HICKS: It's not --

12 THE COURT: -- criminal?

13 MR. HICKS: It is not criminal, and that's there 14 to make clear it's not criminal.

15 Your Honor, in Gonzales the Supreme Court also 16 made a considerable deal out of the scienter requirement and 17 said that scienter requirements alleviate vagueness
18 concerns. There are very considerable scienter requirements 19 in this statute. They vary from section to section, but 20 they go from things like knowing, willful -- or not 21 willful -- knowing, reckless. There's also a section of the 22 act that I noticed for the first time this morning -- if I 23 could just have a moment, Your Honor?

24 Your Honor, I would direct your attention to 25 90-21.81(2). This is the definition of attempt to perform

1 an abortion. It reads: An act or omission of a statutorily
2 required act that under the circumstances as the actor
3 believes them to be -- well, right there is a gigantic 4 window of opportunity for Defendants who are being faced 5 with charges that they've civilly violated this statute, the 6 State would have to prove that the actor if -- excuse me -- 7 what the actor actually believed the circumstances to be,
8 but they go on to read: An act or omission of a statutorily
9 required act that under the circumstances as the actor
10 believes them to be constitutes a substantial step in the 11 course of conduct -- I would argue the statute means -- that 12 is planned to culminate in the performance of an abortion in 13 violation of this article.

14 Well, I think there's a pretty substantial 15 argument there that in order to be held civilly liable, the 16 physician or other health care provider would have had to 17 plan the course of conduct with a view to violating the act, 18 with a specific view to violating the act.

19 Now, that's certainly not an intentional expansive 20 mens rea requirement. It's perhaps, if anything, not very 21 artful drafting. But the argument that this statute is a 22 trap for the unwary and that there will be horrific 23 consequences for physicians and health care providers if the 24 act is not enjoined seems to me to be a stretch, a 25 considerable stretch.

1           Your Honor, the Gonzales Court in addressing this 2 very argument also noted something that needs to be noted
3 here, a challenge to a statute that's based on arbitrary 4 enforcement is also likely to be speculative when the 5 challenge comes prior to any attempt by anybody to enforce 6 the statute. We're here at the pre-enforcement, facial 7 unconstitutionality stage. There's been no attempt by the 8 State to enforce the statute. And so what we have is sort 9 of a parade of terribles, a parade of possible terribles 10 that, again, to me suggest that the Plaintiffs are trying to 11 read this statute to create problems in order to show the 12 Court that the statute needs to be enjoined.

13           As the Court in Gonzales says, the canon of 14 constitutional avoidance reads every reasonable construction 15 must be resorted to in order to save a statute from being 16 held unconstitutional, and that should be done here. Now,
17 Your Honor --

18           THE COURT: So can I ask you about that?

19           MR. HICKS: Of course.

20           THE COURT: 21.90(b), that's the should the woman 21 be unable to read.

22           MR. HICKS: I'm sorry, 21 point?

23           THE COURT: 21.90(b), should a woman be unable to 24 read the material, somebody has to read them to her. So 25 does that mean what it says, or does it mean -- in which

1 case it does raise the question I asked you earlier, or does 2 it mean that if the woman can't read or can't read it in the 3 language that it's provided that somebody has to read it to 4 her if she wants them to? I mean, do you read into that an 5 option because people who can read English certainly have 6 the option not to read the materials.

7 MR. HICKS: The Court is asking me whether the 8 verb "presented" means that the woman must, of necessity, 9 actually received the information?

10 THE COURT: No, uh-uh, I'm sorry. I'm looking at 11 90-21.90(b).

12 MR. HICKS: Oh, forgive me, Your Honor.

13 THE COURT: Yeah, I'm sorry. I may have misstated
14 it.

15 MR. HICKS: No, I'm sure you did.

16 THE COURT: That's the one that --

17 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor, I'm reading it now.
18 Your Honor, I think the answer to your question is the 19 information -- the subpart B refers back --

20 THE COURT: Um-hum.

21 MR. HICKS: -- to 90-21.82 --

22 THE COURT: Right.

23 MR. HICKS: -- and I believe that the information 24 required in .82 is, by and large, the information that was 25 okayed by the Casey Court for the Pennsylvania statute. In

1 other words, this is not -- this is not the fetal -- or the 2 presentation of sonogram. This is a statement that there
3 will be a fetal presentation or there will be a presentation 4 of a fetal sonogram, there will be a -- if possible, if 5 fetal heartbeat can be perceived, there will be a 6 presentation in some manner of that information.

7 But I believe that found at .82 is essentially the 8 information that was required for the Pennsylvania informed 9 consent statute: The name of the physician who will perform 10 the abortion, the medical risks associated with a particular 11 abortion procedure, the gestational age of the unborn child, 12 medical risks of carrying a child to full term, the fact of 13 a display of a realtime view of the unborn child will be 14 made, whether the physician has liability insurance or not,
15 whether the physician has admitting privileges at a hospital 16 within a certain number of miles.

17 THE COURT: I took it to be directed towards the 18 printed materials referenced in -- I'm just going to use the 19 last number, Section 82.2(e), which says the woman has the 20 right to review the printed materials in GS 90-21.83, which 21 is much more than what you were just talking about.

22 MR. HICKS: The physician has to or qualified 23 professional has to inform the woman either by telephone or 24 in person that, among other things, the woman has the right
25 to review the printed materials described in .83 --

1           THE COURT: Right.

2           MR. HICKS: -- that these materials are available
3 on a State-sponsored website.

4           THE COURT: And if she can't read those materials
5 in English or if she can't read at all or Spanish or 6 whatever language it happens to be available in, then 7 according to Section 90(b), somebody has to read it to her.

8           MR. HICKS: That's -- I believe that's correct, 9 and I believe that the only difference between that and 10 Casey is that the physician or the qualified health care 11 provider has to go a step beyond handing the document to the 12 woman or citing her to a website.

13          THE COURT: Right.

14          MR. HICKS: Has to actually read it. But this is 15 not the sonogram.

16          THE COURT: I know, but it is the part where 17 according to 21.83 it has -- apparently then the doctor 18 would have to read the dimensions of the unborn child, 19 information about brain and heart functions, the presence of 20 external members and internal organs, shall provide 21 information about the methods of abortion procedures 22 employed, and then, as you say, the medical risks, the 23 possible adverse psychological effects. I mean, so the 24 doctor actually has to actually -- I mean, I don't know 25 exactly what the materials say, but that's what .83 requires

1   them to say, so --

2               MR. HICKS:  It's my understanding of the statute, 3   Your Honor, from my prior readings of it that the statute
4   does not require the physician or the health care provider 5   to read over the telephone or in person a description of the 6   fetal anatomy --

7               THE COURT:  Okay.

8               MR. HICKS:  -- a reading of the sonogram.  It 9   does -- I agree with you, it does require that the 10   physician, among other things, if the woman -- if the 11   physician believes that the woman cannot read English or 12   Spanish, would require the physician to read the materials 13   over the telephone or in person, the written materials, to 14   her that are prescribed in .82.  But I do not believe that 15   it requires the physician to go beyond that and say you have 16   to come in here, let me perform a sonogram, and then either 17   read to you what the sonogram says so that you will 18   absolutely hear it or let you hear the fetal heartbeat, and 19   I thought that's what I heard the Court asking.

20              THE COURT:  No, I'm not talking about the sonogram 21   or the ultrasound or the fetal heartbeat at all.  I'm trying 22   to find out what that subsection means.  If she's unable to 23   read the materials provided, then the physician or qualified 24   professional has to read those materials to her.

25              MR. HICKS:  I believe you're right, Your Honor.

1 THE COURT: So what materials?

2 MR. HICKS: I believe these are the materials that 3 are specified in 90-21.82.

4 THE COURT: Uh-huh, and that would be?

5 MR. HICKS: Oh, I'm sorry. That would be --

6 THE COURT: I mean, it looks to me like it refers 7 to --

8 MR. HICKS: I think it's the printed materials 9 that are described -- I'm reading from -- I'm reading from 10 90-21.82(2) --

11 THE COURT: E.

12 MR. HICKS: E, yes, Your Honor. I believe that 13 the health care provider would have to read to such a woman
14 the materials described -- printed materials described in GS 15 90-23.83.

16 THE COURT: And then when you look and turn at 17 those -- well, I turn. I don't know how yours is printed 18 out. But that's where I was reading to you in sub -- in 19 .83(a)(2), the information about dimensions and external 20 members and internal organs and such.

21 MR. HICKS: Well, these are the materials that 22 current -- well, these are the materials that would have to 23 be provided physically or through a website by mail or in 24 person to a woman, and they do indeed describe among many 25 other things --

1           THE COURT: But if she can't read them, then the 2 physician has to read them to her.

3           MR. HICKS: Yes, that's my reading of the statute,
4 Your Honor.

5           THE COURT: Okay. And so she does not have the 6 option, like people who can read English or, presumably, 7 Spanish, I don't know what other languages maybe it's being 8 done in, of not reading it. She has to --

9           MR. HICKS: Well, she has the option of not 10 reading it.

11          THE COURT: Well, she has the option of not 12 reading it, but of -- 13          MR. HICKS: Of ignoring it.

14          THE COURT: I guess she -- her only choice is if 15 she doesn't want to hear it, she also has to put her earbuds 16 in.

17          MR. HICKS: Your Honor, I don't know that my 18 practical life experience is universal for everyone, but I
19 have been accused many times by my wife of being in a room
20 with her while she tells me important things, and somehow I
21 totally miss them. I don't believe that all human beings 22 listen to all the information that is spoken to them. If 23 so, every student in school would be an A student. No, I 24 don't believe that a woman is compelled in any meaningful 25 sense to actually perceive this information, but I take your

1 point, and I believe that you're correct in your 2 understanding of the statute.

3 THE COURT: Okay. All right. Thank you. And I
4 think I might need to take a short break. You may finish
5 your argument, and I'll hear rebuttal. So why don't we take 6 a 10-minute recess.

7 (At 11:50 a.m., break taken.)

8 (At 12:00 p.m., break concluded.)

9 THE COURT: You know, I was just going to say I 10 think I have interrupted your argument a good bit, so I'll 11 let you get back to where you were when I started asking you 12 questions.

13 MR. HICKS: I'm happy to answer the Court's 14 questions and appreciate it.

15 Your Honor, getting back to the question that you
16 last asked me, again, I don't have a crystal ball, and I
17 don't have inside information as to what the General
18 Assembly intended by the provision that you questioned me 19 about, but it strikes me just a matter of common sense that 20 perhaps what the General Assembly was seeking to avoid by 21 creating this language about reading to the patient was a 22 situation where there's a patient who -- well, who just 23 can't read, and the General Assembly thought, look, it just 24 wouldn't be fair to treat -- well, I mean, the purpose of 25 the statute is to inform.

1           THE COURT: Right.

2           MR. HICKS: It just wouldn't be fair -- it would 3 be bizarre for us, the members of the General Assembly, to 4 say on the one hand that the information that the statute 5 hopes -- obviously hopes that the patient will receive, 6 process, take into account, consider, it would be bizarre if 7 we have high hopes that most patients will read that or 8 perceive it, take it into account, and then along comes 9 somebody who literally can't read and the General Assembly 10 insensitively says, oh, well, who cares.

11           My sense is that probably in an imperfect world 12 with imperfect solutions, that was probably something that 13 was -- that they grasped at, perhaps imperfectly, to deal 14 with that problem.

15           However, to me the larger issue, the larger point, 16 is this. The statute doesn't contain any requirement for 17 the offering up of information concerning a woman's decision
18 whether to have an abortion or not that the Casey Court
19 didn't approve, and the State doesn't shrink from saying 20 that those requirements are constitutional and okay because 21 the Casey Court said that, and that's the law of the land.

22           Now, Your Honor, as to the vagueness arguments 23 that have been made, I'm looking at page 9 of the 24 Plaintiffs' reply brief, there are five bullets that are 25 identified there.

1 THE COURT: Page?

2 MR. HICKS: Nine.

3 THE COURT: Uh-huh.

4 MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am, of their reply brief. Is 5 the Court there?

6 THE COURT: Yes.

7 MR. HICKS: The first one is may a registered 8 nurse who is a qualified professional provide all of the 9 information required by .82? Well, I take -- I take that 10 qualified professional registered nurse language as an 11 alternative provision that the General Assembly has offered 12 up, an option, something that makes the statute more 13 convenient for the Plaintiffs, not less so, and don't think 14 the Court should enjoin the statute because the General 15 Assembly is trying to make it easier for the Plaintiffs to 16 comply. I mean, the General Assembly could simply say the 17 physician has to do this.

18 We've discussed .2 at length.

19 .3, can a nurse practitioner with a certification
20 in obstetrical ultrasonography and experience in an abortion 21 clinic fulfill the requirements of Section 90-21.85? Again, 22 I think the statute provides a list of who can do this, and 23 therefore, it seems to me, that enjoining the statute on the 24 ground that one provider or the description of one provider 25 is allegedly vague would be a very strange thing to do. The

1 General Assembly is trying to help these people by giving 2 more options.

3           How does one make the fetal heart tone in a 4 quality consistent with the standard medical practice when 5 there is no practice of doing that at all? Well, there's 6 presumably a standard medical practice today that defines 7 how audible and loud and clear the tone of the fetal 8 heartbeat must be for the physician himself to hear when the 9 physician is examining an ultrasound, and my reading of the 10 statute is that it has to meet that standard. It seems to 11 me that's an effort to try to imagine how this language is 12 constitutional rather than trying to find ways to say it's 13 not.

14           What does the 72-hour provision mean if a woman
15 has an ultrasound that complies --

16           THE COURT: So can I ask you about that to make 17 sure I understand what you're saying?

18           MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am.

19           THE COURT: You're saying if for some reason the 20 doctor thought it was important for the doctor to hear the 21 heartbeat, then whatever steps the doctor would take so the 22 doctor could hear it, those are the steps the doctor has to 23 take so the patient can hear it if the patient wants to hear 24 it?

25           MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am. That's my reading -- my

1 common sense reading of the statute. Surely what is good 2 enough for the physician would be good enough for the 3 patient.

4 THE COURT: Okay.

5 MR. HICKS: The doctor can't deliver quality 6 medical advice and services without properly perceiving the 7 sound. I assume that's true.

8 THE COURT: Okay. Go ahead.

9 MR. HICKS: And then finally, what does the 10 72-hour provision mean? If a woman has an ultrasound that 11 complies with Section .85 four days before the abortion, is 12 that okay? I take the statute to say, yes, it is okay, if 13 the -- in fact, what I took that to mean is this, Your 14 Honor. Again, I thought the General Assembly was trying to 15 provide an alternative means so that if the physician -- if 16 the physician who provides the ultrasound is not the same 17 physician who is going to actually perform the abortion some 18 days later, the 72-hour provision was put in place so that 19 the patient could still go to the abortion clinic. The 20 physician could provide the ultrasound and then another one 21 of his partners could perform the abortion some days later.
22 Again, that strikes me as an effort by the General Assembly 23 to make the statute practicable and workable and not an 24 under due burden for them. It doesn't strike me as 25 something that the statute or the General Assembly should be

1 penalized for. Just giving them more options that might be 2 helpful to them.

3 Are there any further questions that I can answer
4 for the Court?

5 THE COURT: I did want to ask you about your 6 brief, because the Plaintiffs did make this argument. In 7 your brief when you -- on the First Amendment issue, the two 8 interests that your brief talked about were the mental 9 health of the mother and preventing coerced abortions, and 10 you did not rely in your brief on the State's interest in -- 11 it's phrased different ways in the cases, but, you know, the 12 State's interest in promoting childbirth as opposed to 13 abortion except in the due process section, so -- but you 14 don't appear to have limited yourself here today.

15 MR. HICKS: No, Your Honor, and I believe that it
16 is legitimate for the State to rely upon that part of Casey 17 which says that the State may in these statutes express its 18 preference for life. It may articulate its view, its 19 prejudice, if you will, in favor of life and against 20 abortion.

21 I would also point out, though, that there's 22 nothing fanciful about the notion that a woman's health may 23 be severely injured if she does not at least have the 24 opportunity to receive the information that's at issue here.
25 The Supreme Court itself made this finding. I mean, it went

1 way out of its way. It called it a "devastating 2 psychological impact." The Court again years later in 3 Gonzales went to even greater lengths in describing 4 eloquently the sort of damage that it believed would be 5 done. I just don't think it can be fairly stated today that 6 there's no evidence for this. I believe there's the sort of 7 evidence that this Court has to take notice of if it comes 8 from the Supreme Court itself in the form of a finding.

9 THE COURT: Okay. I do have one other question.

10 MR. HICKS: Oh, yes, ma'am.

11 THE COURT: The statute doesn't have any opt out 12 for if the doctor thinks that some part of this would be -- 13 would cause psychological or psychiatric harm to the 14 patient.

15 MR. HICKS: It appears to me that that is correct,
16 Your Honor.

17 THE COURT: And does that matter in the analysis?
18 Is that a factor that needs to be taken into account, maybe 19 not on the First Amendment issue, but maybe it's just -- 20 maybe it's more if the due process argument or the undue 21 burden issue ever gets raised.

22 MR. HICKS: The State's view of that is no, Your 23 Honor.

24 THE COURT: All right. I think that was my last 25 question. Anything else you want to say to me?

1           MR. HICKS: For now, I think that's enough, Your 2 Honor. I may have some comments after the -- after Bebe has 3 made her argument.

4           THE COURT: Thank you.

5           MR. HICKS: Thank you, Your Honor.

6           THE COURT: All right. Ms. Anderson?

7           MS. ANDERSON: Thank you, Your Honor.

8           I think it might be helpful to sort of step back 9 and see what .85 -- how it will play out as it's actually 10 written, and that is that a woman who calls to have an 11 abortion, among other things, will be told you have to come 12 in four hours -- at least four hours ahead of time. We're 13 going to schedule you for this mandatory ultrasound that the 14 State's requiring now. She comes in. She's on the 15 operating table and either having a vaginal or abdominal 16 ultrasound performed. Depending on how far along her 17 pregnancy is determines which type of ultrasound is 18 typically used. And while that's happening, the physician
19 turns the screen so that it's in her view. The statute 20 requires that it be -- the images be displayed so that the 21 pregnant woman may view them. So he turns the screen so 22 that those images are in the view.

23           If the woman says to the physician I don't want to 24 look at those images, I don't need to see that, I don't want 25 that as part of my decision-making, the physician has to

1 say, I'm sorry, the State says I have to put those in your 2 view, whether you want to look at them or not, but the State
3 says you may avert your eyes. So the woman's lying there, 4 and she can, you know, put her eyes down, close her eyes,
5 avert her eyes in some way and not look.

6           Then the physician has to describe -- provide 7 specific information as part of the description and 8 explanation. And though it is true that the law does not 9 preclude the physician from saying other things, the State 10 has cherry picked what the physician must say. It doesn't 11 say the physician has to describe the images. The physician 12 has to say if certain things are present. It doesn't have 13 to say if they're absent. So, again, it is part of -- when 14 looked at in its entirety part of the ideological package 15 that this requirement embodies and this whole experience 16 imparts to the woman.

17           So the physician starts to describe, and the woman 18 says I don't want to hear that, I don't need to hear that, 19 that would be very upsetting to me, or I already had an 20 ultrasound, in fact, as you know, I'm here because the 21 ultrasound showed a fetal anomaly, or, you know, I'm a 22 13-year-old incest victim, and I really don't want to hear 23 that, that's going to be very upsetting to me, the physician 24 has to say I'm sorry, the State requires that I provide this 25 explanation and description to you; otherwise, you cannot

1 have a legal abortion. Now, it appears that the State feels 2 that this is okay because the physician can try to obtain 3 some sort of equipment, I don't know, noise-blocking 4 earphones, some sort of a deposition mask or court 5 reporter's mask that Defendants suggested. But in any 6 event, this again -- I mean, this is -- she's here for this 7 medical procedure the State's requiring, and so these sort 8 of extreme measures have to be gone through to try to 9 accommodate the patient's wishes in terms of the level of 10 detail or the information she wants.

11           So that's what -- and also, of course, a physician
12 has to offer to make the heart tone audible in a manner -- 13 in medical practice. But as we've pointed out in evidence, 14 they're -- as Dr. Stuart says, they're -- auscultation of 15 fetal heart tone is not done as part of abortion practice.
16 Dr. Stuart teaches medical students how to perform abortions 17 at UNC. This is not part of what is taught as part of how 18 to perform abortions. So there is no medical practice that 19 involves making heart tone audible.

20           So that is what Subsection 85 requires. There is 21 nothing at all in Casey like that. There's nothing at all 22 in Gonzales like that. Gonzales didn't even involve 23 informed consent requirements, much less, you know -- didn't 24 involve any informed consent requirements, also didn't 25 involve any ultrasound requirements. Casey involved

1 informed consent requirement, but no ultrasound 2 requirements. So just as a factual matter, those weren't at 3 issue before the court.

4           Now, it is true that in both cases the courts made
5 some broad statements. They also made some limited 6 statements, and they also ruled on what was in front of 7 them. And in particular, Casey, in addressing -- it first 8 addressed the undue burden claim; but then when it turned to 9 the First Amendment claim of compelled speech in Casey, it 10 didn't say, well, we've concluded there's no undue burden, 11 so that takes care of the First Amendment issue, period.
12 No, what they did is they said, okay, now we're going to 13 turn to the First Amendment right, and they said what 14 they're ruling on. All that's left of petitioner's argument
15 is a, quote, asserted First Amendment right of a physician 16 not to provide information about the risk of abortion and 17 childbirth in a manner mandated by the State, end quote.
18 That is not the type of information and experience at issue 19 here set forth in .85.

20           And then the Court went on to say that, you know, 21 the physician's First Amendment rights are clearly 22 implicated, but in this context they're saying it's, quote, 23 only as part of the practice of medicine subject to 24 reasonable licensing and regulation by the State, end quote.
25 Again, relating to, as we talked about earlier, informed

1 consent is something that the State is allowed to require 2 that physicians obtain before performing any medical 3 procedure.

4 THE COURT: Now, the State seems to say that Casey
5 allows the State to require the doctor to make ideological 6 speech to the patients. That's what I heard argued.

7 MS. ANDERSON: That's also what I heard argued,
8 Your Honor.

9 THE COURT: Okay. So what part of that do you 10 disagree with?

11 MS. ANDERSON: I disagree that Casey said that the 12 State may require ideological information be imparted to 13 women. Casey does not stand for that. Casey did not rule 14 that the State may do that. Casey did not address that 15 issue.

16 And, again, you have to look at Casey both in 17 terms of what the Court actually said -- and just to -- and 18 the first amendment part, it said -- again, what the Court
19 actually said, it ended that analysis of the First Amendment
20 claim by saying, quote, we see no constitutional infirmity 21 in the requirement that the physician provide the 22 information mandated by the State here. It didn't say we 23 see no constitutional infirmity when the State requires any 24 information or the State requires ideological information or 25 the State requires anything that is truthful and not

1 misleading. They didn't say that. They said the 2 information here is all right under the First Amendment.

3           And, again, even when they are talking in the 4 undue burden setting where they do talk about truthful and 5 misleading and say that if it is, you know, truthful and 6 misleading, it's not going to be an undue burden, they again 7 limit themselves, though, in terms of what they say. They 8 say that the State may require -- it's stated with reference 9 to information about the risks and nature of the abortion 10 procedure, risk of childbirth, and the probable gestational
11 age of the fetus, that, quote, if the information the State 12 requires to be made available to the woman is truthful and 13 not misleading, the requirement may be permissible, and then 14 it found the specific information before it in that case was 15 permissible. It did not rule more broadly. It would not 16 have been appropriate for them to do so, and it didn't.
17 That's what the Court decided.

18           And also they say, again, in Casey, quote, we see 19 no reason why the State may not require doctors to inform a 20 woman seeking an abortion of the availability of materials 21 related to the consequences to the fetus, even when those 22 consequences have no direct relation to her health. So the 23 Court allowed the requirement that a physician make 24 available State materials that put forth some of the State's 25 view of what's important for the woman's decision-making,

1 which is not the same as requiring that the physician
2 describe to the woman and show the woman her own fetus
3 before she can get a lawful abortion.

4 And so, again, the Defendants argue for a very 5 broad reading of Casey which isn't justified by either the 6 undue burden analysis of Casey, which is not their First 7 Amendment analysis, or their First Amendment analysis.

8 Now, in terms of truthful and misleading, which 9 again comes into their undue burden analysis in Casey, they 10 again -- as I mentioned, they said it may be permissible.
11 They did not say that anything that is truthful and not 12 misleading is not an undue burden and, therefore, not a 13 violation of privacy.

14 So, for example, Your Honor posited the idea that 15 maybe the State -- what if the State said the physician has 16 to say abortion is murder. Well, again Casey didn't say 17 ideological speech is okay, and that I think would be 18 clearly ideological speech. But what if the State said that 19 an abortion provider has to say to every patient some people
20 believe that abortion is murder. That is absolutely a true
21 statement. It is absolutely true that in the United States 22 today some people believe abortion is murder. However, that 23 would clearly be ideological, impermissible under the First 24 Amendment to make the physician be the mouthpiece for the 25 State's statement about what abortion is.

1           And since the Gonzales decision, several courts
2 have interpreted Gonzales -- the language in Gonzales and 3 Casey and recognized that they did not -- the broad 4 statements in those decisions did not give states carte 5 blanche to impose any type of requirement under the 6 justification that it's supposedly designed to inform.

7           So, for example, the Planned Parenthood versus 8 Heineman case cited in our papers and in Defendants' papers
9 out of Nebraska, 2010, found that the requirement about risk 10 factors violated, you know, Casey and Gonzales -- or was not 11 allowed under Casey and Gonzales. Again, limited what the 12 State could do.

13           Similarly, in Planned Parenthood versus Dogard,
14 which was a South Dakota case in 2011, First Amendment 15 violation was found both for a requirement that a woman had 16 to go to a crisis pregnancy center and provide information, 17 but also that the risk factor information that the State was 18 requiring physicians provide, that violated the First 19 Amendment post Gonzales, post Casey

20           THE COURT: But didn't -- in both of those cases, 21 didn't the Court find that that's because it either was -- 22 basically was untruthful, I mean, it was misleading, that it 23 was inaccurate?

24           MS. ANDERSON: Well, Your Honor, in both of those 25 cases, they did focus a lot on the truthful/misleading

1 standard. Again, this was -- one of the big differences in 2 those cases to our case is that was information that was 3 sort of added to the list of what is going to be part of the 4 informed consent requirements. So Casey starts out with 5 their list in Pennsylvania; and since then, states have, you
6 know, tried to add to that list, and sometimes they've gone
7 too far, and sometimes they haven't. The point I'm making
8 about that is that the State's -- the courts have recognized 9 that Gonzales and Casey did not give carte blanche to 10 anything just because it's designed to inform.

11 And, of course, the most relevant precedent or the 12 most relevant decision is the Texas Medical Providers 13 decision which actually looked at this type of -- the 14 requirements in this type of statute and there found that 15 those ultrasound requirements clearly violated the First 16 Amendment rights, and clearly the Casey analysis, either 17 under the First Amendment or undue burden, did not apply to 18 that First Amendment claim asserted in the Texas case.

19 And along with misstating -- or what Casey stands
20 for, Defendants have also misstated what Gonzales stands 21 for, and I just want to make sure there's no confusion in 22 the record. Again, Gonzales had nothing to do with an 23 ultrasound requirement, nothing to do with informed consent 24 requirements like even in .82. The dicta that the 25 Defendants try to rely upon repeatedly is in -- the Court

1 was talking about information about the specific medical 2 procedure that women would receive, which again is a classic 3 informed consent category of information, wholly unlike 4 anything required by the ultrasound requirements here.

5           In terms of the purpose of this, it is even more 6 confusing, I think, after hearing Defendants' response what 7 purpose is served by these requirements. Defendant --
8 they've certainly misstated this is an offer. It is not a 9 mandatory offer, it's a mandatory put it in her view, 10 describe it, explain it. But they also -- Defendants also 11 said that the act does not require physicians to get through 12 to women and that there can be this mask and the on/off 13 button on headphones so the woman hears nothing and the 14 woman sees nothing. If that's the case, what possible 15 purpose does it serve to require women to come in at least 16 four hours ahead of time to have an ultrasound for this 17 purpose and then, you know, they don't hear and they don't 18 see, it is simply -- no purpose can be possibly served by 19 that requirement.

20           Also relating --

21           THE COURT: So are you saying -- I'm trying to 22 figure out the implications of what you just said. I'm 23 sorry. I'm having a little trouble articulating it.

24           MS. ANDERSON: Should I try to re-articulate?

25           THE COURT: Okay. Yes, go ahead.

1 MS. ANDERSON: I think that there are several 2 points to this that I'm trying to make, Your Honor, and will 3 try to make more clearly.

4 No. 1, Defendants are misstating what this is.
5 This is not an offer. These are mandated experiences and 6 symbolic speech that's required. And they try to justify 7 those requirements by saying that they're going to prevent 8 psychological harm and coercion and then also promote the 9 potential life. Well, they have no evidence whatsoever that 10 these requirements are going to in any way protect women 11 from psychological harm, no evidence that women are harmed
12 by not being required to have the image put in their view 13 and the information be imparted through the physician's 14 mouth and later seeing or hearing a fetal heartbeat, which 15 is their premise for their psychological harm related to 16 .85. They have no evidence and there's no logic to say that 17 those requirements will prevent women from being coerced 18 into having an abortion.

19 So, moreover, they say that the women may turn 20 off -- you know, look away, and they do not have to hear.
21 So they're acknowledging that really this is -- it's one way
22 in which they are acknowledging that this is not narrowly 23 tailored, this is overbroad, and the overbroad aspect to it 24 serves no possible purpose. It serves no possible purpose 25 to force the women to come in four hours early if they're

1 going to choose not to look and not to hear.

2           And as I mentioned before, if that's the case, and 3 it clearly is, it can't possibly serve a legitimate purpose, 4 then what purpose is served -- then it would not make sense
5 to then say, well, that's all right, that's an acceptable -- 6 that's okay. The State can do that. The State can require 7 women to come in and go through the charade and to put on 8 these headphones and turn on the off switch and look away, 9 and yet they're still going to have to wait four hours to 10 contemplate something they didn't see or hear, and yet -- 11 you know, so that makes no sense. But then if the State 12 says, all right, we'll allow for it to be enjoined as to 13 those women who don't want to see or hear, then clearly you 14 would have to let women know when they're scheduling you 15 have this opposition, which clearly defeats the State's 16 purpose.

17           So there's -- this whole bundle of what they're 18 requiring doesn't match what they say it is, doesn't match
19 anything in Casey and Gonzales, doesn't match anything 20 upheld by any court in this country, and doesn't hold 21 together and make sense in terms of serving a purpose and 22 serving a purpose in a narrowly tailored -- by a narrowly 23 tailored means

24           THE COURT: So I think maybe I've figured out how 25 to say my question. Do you have the statute in front of 1 you?

2 MS. ANDERSON: Yes, I do, Your Honor.

3 THE COURT: Okay. So looking at 21.85, it says in 4 sub A, at least four hours before the procedure, you have to 5 come in. And then the first thing that happens there in sub 6 sub one is you have to have the ultrasound. And then you've 7 got these other things that we're talking about.

8 So you are saying that if the require -- what have 9 you been calling them -- the speech and display provisions 10 violate the defendant's First Amendment rights, then that 11 means sub one is unnecessary because it has no purpose, and 12 it's -- but it's not unconstitutional by itself, is it? Or 13 are you saying that on First Amendment grounds and on the 14 basis of the arguments you're making today?

15 MS. ANDERSON: Right, Your Honor. We're certainly 16 not saying that it's unconstitutional to require an 17 ultrasound, and, in fact, the law currently requires an 18 ultrasound.

19 THE COURT: Okay.

20 MS. ANDERSON: This law changes those 21 requirements, and part of the changes is you have to come in 22 four hours early, and it's -- only limited people can do the 23 ultrasound, not everyone who is qualified to do an 24 ultrasound. And why is it changed that way? Because it's 25 then so that this display can be put in your view and this

1 explanation and description can be provided to you. That's 2 the purpose of changing the requirements in terms of the 3 temporal requirements and who performs the ultrasound.

4           So if the temporal -- if the requirement that the 5 display be put in your view and the explanation of the 6 description be provided does, as we say, as Plaintiffs say, 7 violate First Amendment rights of the physicians and is 8 struck, there's no purpose to these changes to the rest of 9 the law. And, again, it's looking at the law in context and 10 seeing the totality of the new requirements, what does this 11 law change? And by the way, that's one way in which this 12 law is different than Texas. Texas did not have any 13 requirement preexisting for an ultrasound. Here we have 14 that in North Carolina.

15           And so there already is going to be an ultrasound.
16 A woman is already going to have the opportunity to look at 17 the screen, look at the images, ask for them to be 18 explained. So this -- peeling off this piece and just 19 leaving one serves no purpose if, as we assert, the rest of 20 the package is found to be a violation of the physician's 21 First Amendment rights.

22           In terms of -- Your Honor was asking Defendants 23 about this provision about reading it. We certainly -- 24 Plaintiffs read 90-21.90(b) where it says "unable to read 25 the materials provided to the woman pursuant to this

1 section" to be referring to, I think, what Your Honor was 2 focusing on, which is the part of 90-21.82(2), which is E, 3 which is the -- states the woman has the right to review the 4 printed materials described in Subsection 83 which is the 5 State materials, and then further on in subsection three of 6 90-21.82, it again says the woman has to be informed of her 7 opportunity to review the information. So, again, we would 8 submit that it doesn't make sense and isn't appropriate for 9 the Defendants to require that a woman who is illiterate has 10 to have the materials read to her when other women do not 11 have to read the materials, and they clearly do not have to 12 read the materials under the language of the statute.

13 Just to turn quickly to the scienter issue which 14 Defendants addressed, they leave out the fact that there are 15 administrative penalties, that there's serious licensure
16 penalties if a physician performs an abortion in violation 17 of law. There is no scienter there. In the Gonzales case, 18 there was scienter. It was a criminal law. It has 19 scienter. And there is certainly Supreme Court case law 20 that supports the position that someone is not required to 21 try to comply with a vague statute and then wait and see if 22 they get sanctioned, penalized, criminalized -- penalized in 23 some way, and for -- one case that stands for that principle 24 is Babbitt v United Farmworkers National Union at 442 US 289, 25 1979. So certainly Plaintiffs should not be put in the 1 position of having to sort of take a chance that they're 2 interpreting unclear provisions correctly and then see if 3 they are sanctioned or are sued or have some other penalty.

4           In terms of criminal penalties, Plaintiffs are not 5 looking for trouble. Plaintiffs would be very happy if this 6 law did not have criminal penalties or does not have 7 criminal penalties. Initially reading it, I never thought
8 it had criminal penalties. But then when you look at it 9 more carefully and you see that reference to the criminal 10 statute that is in .85 and not in any other section, again, 11 statutory construction principles say you can't just ignore 12 what the Legislature has put in there, you're supposed to 13 try to figure it has some meaning, and so that's why there 14 is this uncertainty for Plaintiffs as to whether there are 15 criminal penalties.

16           But certainly we would be happy if there's an 17 enforceable order that says there are no criminal penalties 18 that would bind the prosecutors and their successors and so 19 that physicians would not have to worry that they actually 20 would be subject to criminal penalties under this law.

21           In terms of the vagueness that the response of 22 Defendants, the reading -- it seems that they're proposing 23 that one can read .82 saying that all of the information can 24 be provided either by a physician or a qualified 25 professional. They said that the Legislature was trying to

1 make it more convenient. Again, that is a reading that 2 Plaintiffs would welcome, but not one that Plaintiffs feel 3 they can safely assume given the contradictions in the 4 statute and would certainly need something stronger than 5 Defendants' statement in court that that's the reading.
6 Again, would need protection of a court order binding
7 Defendants and their successors.

8           In terms of the requirement as to who is a 9 qualified technician, if the Legislature was trying to help 10 by giving more options, as Defendants say, it would have 11 helped if they gave an option that made sense in terms of 12 medical practice.

13           In terms of the 72-hour requirement, again, 14 Defendants have said now that it means that if a 15 physician -- any physician, whether -- you know, I 16 understand them to mean any physician doesn't have to be the 17 physician who will perform the procedure. If any physician
18 performs the ultrasound and does it within the 72- to 4-hour
19 window and does the paperwork required here and complies 20 that that would be acceptable, that is certainly a 21 reading -- you know, if that -- we don't want that statute 22 to -- provision to stand for other reasons. But if it were 23 to stand, that would be a reading that would -- certainly is 24 one plausible reading and certainly would be one that 25 Plaintiffs could live with.

1           THE COURT: Well, what else could it mean?

2           MS. ANDERSON: Well, Your Honor, that's the thing.
3 It's hard to know what it means. I think that it could mean
4 that. It could mean that you have to have the ultrasound
5 within a 4- to 72-hour window in any circumstances. It 6 could mean that -- we're not sure what it means.

7           It just seems odd -- it wasn't written to clearly 8 say that, because, for example, a lot of statutes regulating 9 abortion put some informed consent or other requirements -- 10 place it on referring physicians or just physicians 11 generally. Here, you know, if they said for example 12 "referring physician," that might have been clear. But if 13 that's what it means, that would be again -- it seems that 14 would be one possible reading of it. But other readings 15 were that it couldn't be since the statute requires that it 16 be the physician who performed the procedure in the general 17 part. Does that mean this only applies if it's at some 18 other facility? Defendants say no. That's certainly an 19 acceptable reading if that's what it means. But it doesn't 20 seem to be the only reading.

21           But, again, if the Court can do a limited reading
22 to make some -- give some clarity based on what Defendants 23 say and that would protect Plaintiffs so they could rely on 24 that information, that would be helpful if that provision 25 stands.

1           I think that one thing that's very important to 2 point out, again, Defendants seem to imply, and I may have 3 misheard, but seem to imply that Casey and/or Gonzales --
4 actually, the Supreme Court made findings that the type -- 5 that women would be harmed if they did not look at an 6 ultrasound image or hear the description. Clearly, neither 7 of those cases stood for that. So, again, maybe I was 8 mishearing what Defendants said because those cases, again, 9 did not involve that at all.

10           And just as a point for the record, Defendants 11 have misstated what Casey required. There were several 12 other things in .82 that were not required in Casey, but 13 that's not the basis upon which we're seeking a preliminary 14 injunction, Your Honor.

15           Do you have any questions?

16           THE COURT: No. Thank you.

17           MS. ANDERSON: Thank you, Your Honor.

18           THE COURT: I'll give you a limited --

19           MR. HICKS: I won't take but a minute, Your Honor.

20           THE COURT: -- opportunity.

21           MR. HICKS: Just a couple points. One, I did not 22 mention in my initial presentation something that I'm sure 23 the Court already knows, and that is that there is a 24 substantial, I would say, comprehensive severability clause 25 in the statute that I believe would and should inform any

1 court's decision about a facial attack, particularly on the 2 vagueness issues, the alleged vagueness issues.

3           Two, the scienter issue that Ms. Anderson raised,
4 either I don't understand it, or, if I do understand it, I 5 certainly don't agree with it because the provision -- the 6 ethics provision of the North Carolina Medical Licensing 7 Board that they cite in their brief essentially says that 8 the licensing board can revoke, suspend, or do other things 9 to your license that are bad if it determines that you have 10 performed an abortion illegally in North Carolina. But in 11 order to determine that an abortion has been performed
12 illegally in North Carolina, one has to look at the statute 13 which contains scienter requirements. So scienter, by 14 definition, is important into what the licensing board would 15 be able to do.

16           Finally, the Casey Court -- it's true.
17 Ms. Anderson is right. The Casey Court did not say in these 18 words that a State can require a physician to give what 19 Ms. Anderson calls ideological speech. What I was trying to 20 say to the Court when the Court asked me this question was 21 that, as a practical matter, I don't think that the term
22 "ideological speech" has much meaning anymore after Casey, 23 at least not in the context of consent -- informed consent 24 for abortion statutes because what the Casey Court said is 25 definitely okay are things that clearly are allowed to

1 impart the State's preference. I think profound preference, 2 it said, for continued life of the child as opposed to 3 abortion and many other things that impart the State's, I 4 don't know what you want to call it, philosophical or 5 ideological view, whatever you want to call it.

6           So to say that the Casey Court didn't okay 7 ideological speech in this context, okay, it's true, the 8 Casey Court didn't use those terms. But I think if you look 9 beyond quotes and look at what the Casey Court really did 10 put its imprimatur on, if that's not ideological, I'm not 11 sure what is.

12           Your Honor, one final point, and that is this.
13 It's not possible for me to know at this point what the 14 Court's views are about the vagueness issue or, for that 15 matter, any others, and I'm also a little confused by the 16 evidence. If the Court wishes us to come and present 17 evidence in December, that's what we would like to do.

18           If the Court, however, is going to issue or 19 proposes to at least decide on the question of whether to 20 issue a temporary restraining order based on its view of 21 evidence tendered by the Plaintiffs, I think the Defendants 22 would like to have the opportunity very quickly and 23 expeditiously to present the Court with counterevidence. If 24 the Court is going to decide this facial challenge on 25 evidence, then I think we'd like to have the opportunity to 1 at least put it in the record.

2 THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

3 MR. HICKS: Thank you, Your Honor.

4 THE COURT: Anything you want to say?

5 MS. ANDERSON: Thank you, Your Honor, just I 6 wanted to mention that, of course, we would object to any 7 delay in any decision on injunction so that Defendants could 8 put in evidence. They have had an opportunity under the 9 Court's scheduling order to do so. They chose not to do so.
10 And they'll be -- you know, abortion providers and women 11 seeking abortions will be harmed if this law is allowed to 12 go into effect, and, therefore, we would oppose any 13 submissions at this time by defendant or certainly any 14 submissions that would have the potential to delay in any 15 way the Court's decision. Thank you, Your Honor.

16 THE COURT: Thank you. Let me ask the State one 17 more question.

18 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor.

19 THE COURT: The argument -- you all have gone back 20 and forth, so I don't know exactly when this was made. But 21 the Plaintiffs' argument that the 4-hour delay after the 22 ultrasound does not have any purpose if the remaining 23 provisions were to be put on hold for whatever reason, what 24 do you say about that?

25 MR. HICKS: First, I want to be sure I understand

1 it. I thought I heard Ms. Anderson's argument to be that if 2 a woman comes in seeking an abortion and says I do not want 3 to receive that information, then what could possibly be the 4 point of making her wait four hours. Is that a fair 5 characterization of what she was saying?

6 THE COURT: You heard the same thing I did. I 7 mean, I guess, what I'm trying to understand is does the 8 State say there is a reason for requiring people to come in 9 four hours before the procedure to have the sonogram if the 10 doctor does not have to provide the visual display and the 11 words that go with it?

12 MR. HICKS: As our brief stated, Your Honor, and, 13 again, I want to be clear about this, the State does not 14 shrink from this. I understand the statute, and I believe 15 that my colleagues understand the statute to intend to offer 16 up to the woman seeking an abortion information that the 17 State believes is profoundly necessary in order to 18 adequately inform her decision about whether to have it.
19 And I believe that the statute is designed to present 20 information in a form that is far more powerful than simply 21 a piece of paper. And, therefore, I take it that the 4-hour 22 period, whether the woman decides to avail herself or not, 23 is intended as a period of sober reflection for the woman on 24 whether she should have looked at the information, whether 25 she should now change her mind and say I would now like to

1 see it --

2 THE COURT: Okay. But maybe I'm not -- I must not 3 be asking my question the right way. Just -- I don't know
4 what I'm going to do yet, so, you know, this is not code.

5 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor.

6 THE COURT: But I'm trying to not get you to come 7 back or have lots of fights about what orders say, you know, 8 when I get there, so I'm trying to think of all my 9 questions.

10 MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am.

11 THE COURT: So if the Court were to say that an 12 injunction would be appropriate just -- an injunction would 13 be appropriate on the -- what the Plaintiffs have been 14 calling the speech and display, the part that says you have 15 to show them the ultrasound and you have to describe to them 16 what is visible on the screen, if that violates the 17 physician's First Amendment rights, then is there any 18 remaining purpose to the other provision of subsection 85 or 19 .85 that requires you to come in four hours early for the 20 sonogram? I mean, does it all stand or fall together in 21 that way?

22 MR. HICKS: I believe it does. I think the 4-hour 23 period itself is a signal to the woman that this is a solemn 24 occasion in which the State is giving you a cooling-off 25 period, a 4-hour period to soberly and judicially consider

1 your next step, whether she receives the information or not,
2 whether she avails herself of the information or not.

3 THE COURT: Okay. Thank you. Okay. So the one
4 thing that I think might be helpful to me, being a fairly 5 concrete person, would be if I got some proposed orders
6 to -- you know, injunctions are very specific things. So 7 what I would like the plaintiff to prepare and submit would 8 be one proposed order that would just address the First 9 Amendment issue and doesn't address the vagueness or due 10 process argument that you've presented. Then a separate one 11 that addresses only your void-for-vagueness issues and 12 breaking it down so that I can look at each one in 13 particular. And then another one that just -- that 14 addresses the void-for-vagueness issue that doesn't impose 15 the injunction but addresses the concerns that you were 16 saying needed to be addressed.

17 Now, of course, I'd would be happy for the 18 defendant to do that, too. But if I rule your way, the 19 order just needs to say "denied." So I'm happy for you to 20 submit whatever you want, but it's not helpful in the same 21 kind of way.

22 MR. HICKS: Is the Court afraid that my feelings 23 will be hurt if you don't solicit an order from me?

24 THE COURT: I just want to be sure you know I'm 25 happy to hear from you on this; I just don't want to make

1 you do something that doesn't seem to have a lot of purpose
2 to it. And I'm asking the plaintiff to submit that more to 3 help me think about it than I am for, you know, any 4 argumentative purposes. So if you all can do that. Today
5 is Monday. Can you get it to me -- I'm sensitive to the -- 6 I believe it's next week, correct -- some time on Wednesday.
7 Is that feasible?

8 MS. ANDERSON: Yes.

9 THE COURT: Okay. And --

10 MR. HICKS: Upon our receipt -- excuse me, Your 11 Honor, may I?

12 THE COURT: Yes, uh-huh.

13 MR. HICKS: Upon the State's receipt of the 14 proposed orders from counsel for the plaintiff, does the 15 Court contemplate that the State may be heard in response to 16 those report orders, or what is --

17 THE COURT: Well, that's what I was saying. I 18 mean, I would be happy to give you the option of presenting 19 alternative proposed orders that reach the same result if 20 there's -- or that, you know, quarrel with the use of the 21 language.

22 MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am.

23 THE COURT: I mean, as I say, if I rule your way,
24 I just throw those out the door and say "denied" because I 25 don't have to really do a lot more than that, I don't think.

1 But if I'm going to enjoin somebody from doing something,
2 then, you know, I need a fairly specific order, and I would 3 welcome your thoughts not that that would be the wrong
4 decision, but that the wording of it, that there's problems
5 with the wording of it.

6 MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am. That's exactly what I was 7 asking.

8 THE COURT: Yes. So, you know, if you all get me
9 something by Wednesday, and you get me something --

10 MR. HICKS: In response maybe by Thursday?

11 THE COURT: -- by Thursday, that would be all 12 right. But I don't want either of these to argue really 13 about the merits. You know, this would just be, as we used 14 to say in state court, the form of the order. I assume 15 that's a meaningful term here as well.

16 So, yeah, I don't really -- you all have argued 17 the case and briefed it pretty thoroughly, so I don't feel 18 the need for -- but I am sensitive to the way that things 19 are worded. And so if I do decide to enjoin something, I 20 don't want to do something unintentionally or cause problems
21 that I'm not aware of. So I would like you all to give me
22 very -- three separate, very specific ones and submit them 23 electronically -- well, talk to Ms. Sanders about the way to 24 submit that because there's some ways that you can do that 25 that are more helpful than others.

1           MR. HICKS: Is a Word document acceptable to the 2 Court?

3           THE COURT: Yes, I prefer it, never having 4 mastered Word Perfect. Yes, I would prefer that. So if you 5 all would get it to me by Wednesday; you get it to me by 6 Thursday.

7           MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor.

8           MS. ANDERSON: Your Honor, if I could just get a 9 point of clarification? Is the third proposed order you 10 suggest one basically that would provide interpretations of 11 the vague sections?

12          THE COURT: Well, you made an argument towards the 13 end that so long as the State's interpretation was, in fact, 14 what the law meant, then you were okay with that as long as 15 there was an enforceable order saying so, and I took that to 16 mean you were asking me to say so if I agreed with the 17 State's interpretation. So that's what I was offering you 18 the opportunity to present.

19          MS. ANDERSON: Thank you, Your Honor.

20          THE COURT: And, you know, obviously on that one, 21 it would be particularly important for you all to be heard 22 about the form or to offer an alternative way to say it.

23          MR. HICKS: I understand.

24          THE COURT: You know, I'm open to -- I really 25 would probably prefer that you just offer me an alternative

1 way to say it rather than quarrel with the way that they 2 have said it.

3 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor.

4 THE COURT: Any other questions about the 5 logistics or housekeeping matters? Yes?

6 MS. ANDERSON: Well, Your Honor, maybe then we 7 could get our proposed order, that third one in by the end 8 of tomorrow so that Defendants have until the end of 9 Wednesday, and that way you would have everything by the end 10 of Wednesday.

11 THE COURT: If you all can do it by tomorrow, then 12 that's great. If you all are comfortable -- okay. You do 13 it by the end of the day tomorrow, and then the State by the 14 end of the day Wednesday. You still have 24 --

15 MS. ANDERSON: For the third one.

16 THE COURT: Oh, it's the third one only you were 17 proposing to do that?

18 MS. ANDERSON: Well, I understood that to be the 19 one the Defendants might need to respond to.

20 THE COURT: Well, that's the one --

21 MR. HICKS: We would like to look at all of them.

22 THE COURT: -- they would particularly need to,
23 but I would want to give them the opportunity on all three 24 of them.

25 MS. ANDERSON: Then could I suggest maybe that

1 within 24 hours of when we submit them, Defendants would 2 submit their response. If we submit them in early, we will.

3 THE COURT: Yeah, I mean, the more time I have to 4 think about it, obviously the better it is for me, but I
5 don't want to give you all ulcers to get it done. So, yeah, 6 if you'll get it to me, and you'll be serving each other by 7 email, I assume, so it will be immediately available. Yeah, 8 okay.

9 And then if you will hold the 6th and the 7th of 10 December available.

11 MR. HICKS: Yes, Your Honor.

12 THE COURT: And then after I decide whatever I 13 decide, you know, if I say no injunction, then we can 14 discuss whether or not we need to have that hearing to give 15 the plaintiff an opportunity to present whatever other -- I 16 don't know if that's even necessary. It would seem to be 17 more necessary if I do decide to do an injunction to give 18 you all some opportunity to -- since this is all been very 19 quick. But we can talk about that after I decide.

20 MR. HICKS: Yes, ma'am.

21 THE COURT: Anything else? All right. We'll be 22 adjourned.

23 (At 12:56 p.m., proceedings adjourned.)
